

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

Presented by

ZPB Mosherm

		·

		·

		•
_

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, ANCIENT AND MODERN,

PROM

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

TO THE

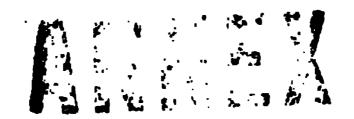

BEGINNING OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

VOL. IV.

Presented by

Miss Holes As Depus

New York Public Library
3 49512 1918.

ZPB Moshern

MA

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, ANCIENT AND MODERN,

PROM

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

TO THE

BEGINNING OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

VOL. IV.

The state of the s

W...

TO BUILDING TO BE

3117 (

WITH MALL CARLES OF THE WAY ON A CONTROL

74 FOY

Strahan and Presson, New-Street-Square, London.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY,

ANCIENT AND MODERN,

PROM

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

TO THE

BEGINNING OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY:

IN WHICH

The Rife, Progress, and Variations of Church Power are considered in their Connection with the State of Learning and Philosophy, and the Political History of Europe during that Period.

BY THE LATE LEARNED

JOHN LAURENCE MOSHEIM, D.D.

CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF GOTTINGEN.

Translated from the Original Latin,
And illustrated with Notes, Chronological Tables, and an Appendix,
BY ARCHIBALD MACLAINE, D.D.

A NEW EDITION IN SIX VOLUMES,

CONTINUED, TO THE END OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY,

BY CHARLES COOTE, LL.D.

AND FURNISHED WITH

AN ADDITIONAL APPENDIX TO THE FIRST BOOK, BY THE RIGHT REV. DR. GEORGE GLEIG OF STIRLING.

VOL. IV.

LONDON:

Printed for T. Cadell and W. Davies; F. C. and J. Rivington; Wilkie and Robinson; F. Wingrave; J. Walker; R. Lea; J. Cuthell; J. Nunn; Clarke and Sons; J. Kearsley; Longman and Co.; B. Jeffery; B. Crosby; W. Stewart; Lackington, Aslem, and Co.; S. Bagster; J. Asperne; R. Floyer; R. H. Evans; J. Richardson; J. Mackinley; P. and W. Wynne; J. Johnson and Co.; and J. Faulder.

1811.

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

AN

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

BOOK THE FOURTH.

CONTAINING THE

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

PROM

THE BEGINNING OF THE REFOR-MATION BY LUTHER

TO

THE PRESENT TIMES.

INTRODUCTION.

THE order and method, that have been Change of followed in the former part of this Work, method. cannot be continued, without the greatest inconveniences, in this Fourth Book, which relates to the modern history of the church. From the commencement of the fixteenth century, the face of religion was remarkably changed; the divisions, that had formerly perplexed the church, increased considerably; and the Christian societies, that relinquished the established forms of divine worship, and erected themselves into separate assemblies, upon principles different from those of the Roman hierarchy, rapidly multiplied. This circumstance renders it impossible to present in one connected series, or, as it were, in one continued tablature, the events, vicissitudes, and revolutions, that happened in the church, divided its members, and enfeebled the dominion of its tyrants. From the period on which we now enter, the bond of union among Christians, that had been formed by a blind obedience to the Roman pontiff, was, in almost every country, either dissolved, or at least relaxed; and consequently this period of our history must be divided into a multitude of branches, into as many parts, as there were famous fects that arose in this century.

II. It is however proper to observe here, that The history many of the events, which distinguish this century, had a manifest relation to the church in general, and not to any Christian society in particular. And as these events deserve to be mentioned separately, on two general account of the, church in this century may be divided into account of their remarkable tendency to throw a light upon the state of Christianity in general, as well as upon the history of each Christian society, we shall therefore divide this Fourth Book into two main and principal parts, of which the one will contain the General, and the other the Particular History of the Christian Religion.

The general history of the church—its extent.

III. To the General History belong all those events which relate to the state of Christianity, considered in itself and in its utmost extent, to the Christian church viewed in the general, and abstracted from the miferable and multiplied divisions into which it was rent by the passions of men. Under this head we shall take notice of the advancement and progress of Christianity in general, without any regard to the particular sects that were thus instrumental in promoting its interests; nor shall we omit the confideration of certain doctrines, rites, and institutions, which appeared worthy of admission to all, or at least to the greatest part of the Christian sects, and which consequently produced, in various countries, improvements or changes of greater or less importance.

Particular history.

IV. In the Particular History of this century, we propose reviewing, in their proper order, the various fects into which the Christian church was divided. This part of our work, for the fake of method and precision, we shall subdivide into two. In the first we shall comprehend what relates to the more ancient Christian sects, both in the eastern and western hemispheres; while the second will be confined to the history of those more modern societies, the date of whose origin is posterior to the Reformation in Germany. In the accounts that are here to be given of the circumstances, fate, and doctrines of each fect, the method laid down in the introduction to this work shall be rigorously observed, as far as is possible; since it seems best calculated to lead us to an accurate knowlege of the nature, progress, and tenets of every Christian society, that arose in these times of discord.

V. The most momentous event that distinguished History of the church after the sisteenth century, and we may the Meson. add, the most glorious of all the revolutions that happened in the ftate of Christianity since the time of its divine and immortal Founder, was that happy change introduced into religion, which is known by the title of the Bleffed Reformation. This grand revolution, which arose in Saxony from small beginnings, not only spread ittelf with the utmost rapidity through all the European provinces, but also extended its efficacy to the most distant parts of the globe, and may be justly considered as the main spring which has moved the nations from that illustrious period, and occasioned the greatest part both of those civil and religious revolutions that fill the annals of history down to our times. The face of Europe was, in a more especial manner, changed by this great event. The present age feels yet, in a sensible manner, and ages to come will continue to perceive, the inestimable advantages it produced, and the inconveniences of which it has been the innocent occasion. The history, therefore, of such an important revolution, from which so many others have derived their origin, and whose relations and connexions are so extensive and so general, demands a peculiar degree of attention, and has an unquestionable right to a distinguished place in such a work as this. We now proceed to give a compendious view of the modern history of the Christian church, according to the intimated plan and

THE

SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

SECTION I.

THE HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION.

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. 1.
The division of the first fection.

L THE History of the Reformation is too ample and extensive to be comprehended, without some degree of confusion, in the uninterrupted narrative of one Section: we shall therefore divide it into Four Parts.

The First will contain an Account of the State of Christianity before the Commencement of the Reformation.

The SECOND, the History of the Reformation from its Beginning until the date of the Confession drawn up at Augsburg.

The THIRD will exhibit a View of the same History, from this latter period to the Commencement of the War of Smalcalde. And,

The Fourth will carry it down to the Peace that was concluded with the Advocates of the Reformation in the year 1555 [a]. This division is natural; it arises spontaneously from the events themselves.

[a] The writers of the History of the Reformation, of every rank and order, are enumerated by the very learned Philip Fred. Hane (who himself deserves a most eminent rank in this class), in his Historia Sacrorum a Luthero emendatorum, part I. cap. i. p. 1. and by Jo. Alb. Fabricius, in his Centisolium Lutheranum, part II. cap. clxxxvii. p. 863—The greatest part, or at least the most eminent, of this list of authors must be consulted by such as desire a farther confirmation or illustration of the matters which I propose to relate briefly in the course of this history. The illustrious names of Sleidan and Seckendorss, and others, who have distinguished themselves in this kind of erudition, are too well known to render it necessary to recommend their works to the perusal of the curious reader.

CHAPTER I.

Concerning the state of the Christian Church before the Reformation.

A BOUT the commencement of this century, the Roman pontiffs lived in the utmost tranquillity; nor had they, as things feemed to be situated, the least reason to apprehend any oppo-Things were sition to their pretensions, or rebellion against their authority; since those dreadful commotions, which had been excited in the preceding ages by the Waldenses, Albigenses, and Beghards, and more recently by the Bohemians, were entirely suppressed, and had yielded to the united powers of counsel and the sword. Such of the Waldenses as yet remained, lived contented under the difficulties of extreme poverty in the valleys of Picdmont, and proposed to themselves no higher earthly felicity, than that of leaving to their descendants that wretched and obscure corner of Europe, which separates the Alps from the Pyrenean mountains; while the handful of Bohemians, that furvived the ruin of their faction, and still persevered in their opposition to the Roman yoke, had neither strength nor knowledge adequate to any new attempt, and therefore, instead of inspiring terror, became objects of contempt.

II. We must not, however, conclude from this The comapparent tranquillity and security of the pontiss and plaints their adherents, that their measures were applauded, proper and or that their chains were worn without reluctance; clergy infor not only private persons, but also the most powerful princes and sovereign states, exclaimed loudly loudly against the despotic dominion of the pontiffs, the fraud, violence, avarice, and injustice that prevailed in their counsels, the arrogance, tyranny, and extortion of their legates, the unbridled licentiousness and enormous crimes of the clergy and monks of all denominations, the inordinate feverity and partiality of the Roman laws; and demanded publicly, as their ancestors had done before them, a Reformation of the church, in its head and in its members, and a general council to accomplish that necessary and happy purpose [b]. But these complaints and demands were not carried so far as to produce any good effect; fince they came from persons, who did not entertain the least doubt about the supreme authority of the pope in religious matters, and who, of consequence, instead of attempting, themselves, to bring about that reformation which was so ardently desired, remained entirely inactive, and looked for redrefs to the court of Rome, or to a general council. As long as the authority of the Roman pontiff was deemed sacred, and his jurisdiction supreme, there could be no reason to expect any considerable reformation either of the corruptions of the church or of the manners of the clergy.

CENT. in a quiet state at the beginning of this century.

CENT. XVI.

[b] These complaints and accusations have been largely enumerated by several writers. See, among many others, Val. Ern. Loescherus, in Alis et documentis Resormationis, tom. i. cap. v. p. 105.—cap. ix. p. 181. & Ern. Salom. Cyprian. Presat. ad Wilk. Ern. Tenzelii Historiam Resormat. published at Leipsic in 8vo, in the year 1717.—The grievances complained of by the Germans in particular, are amply mentioned by J. F. Georgius, in his Gravamina Imperator. et nationis German. adversus sedem R: manam, cap. vii. p. 261. Nor do the wifer and more learned among the modern Romanists pretend to deny that the church and clergy, before the time of Luther, were corrupt in a very high degree.

III. If any thing seemed proper to destroy the CENT. gloomy empire of superstition, and to alarm the XVI. security of the lordly pontiffs, it was the restoration of learning in Europe, and the number of men The restoration of of genius that suddenly arose, under the benign learning. influence of that auspicious revolution. But even this new scene was insufficient to terrify the lords of the church, or to make them apprehend the decline of their power. It is true, that this happy revolution in the republic of letters dispelled the gloom of ignorance, and kindled in the minds of many the love of truth and facred liberty. It is also certain that many of these great men, such as Erasmus and others, pointed the delicacy of their wit, or leveled the fury of their indignation, at the superstitions of the times, the corruptions of the priesthood, the abuses that reigned in the court of Rome, and the brutish manners of the monastic orders. But this was not sufficient, since none had the courage to strike at the root of the evil, to attack the papal jurisdiction and statutes, which were absurdly, yet artfully, sanctified by the title of canon-law, or to call in question the ancient and most pernicious opinion, that Christ had established a vicegerent at Rome, clothed with his supreme and unlimited authority. Entrenched within these strong holds, the pontiffs looked upon their own authority and the peace of the church as beyond the reach of danger, and treated with indifference the threats and invectives of their enemies. Armed with power to punish, and abundantly furnished with the means of rewarding in the most alluring manner, they were ready, on every commotion, to crush the obstinate, and to gain over the mercenary to their cause; and this indeed could not but contribute considerably to the stability of their dominion.

CENT.
XVI.

PLCT. 1.
The popes
Alexander
VI.
Pies III.

IV. Hence it was, that the bishops of Rome lived in the utmost security and ease, and being free from apprehensions and cares of every kind, followed without reluctance, and gratified without any limitation or restraint, the various demands of their lufts and passions. Alexander VI., whom humanity dislowns, and who is rather to be confidered as a monster than as a man, whose deeds excite horror, and whose enormities place him on a level with the most execrable tyrants of ancient times, stained the commencement of this century by the most atrocious crimes. The world was delivered from this papal fiend in the year 1503, by the poisonous draught which he had prepared for others, as is generally believed; though there are historians that attribute his death to sickness and old age [c]. He was succeeded in the pontificate by Pius III. who, in less than a month, was deprived by death of that high dignity. The vacant chair was obtained by fraud and bribery by Julian de la Rovere, who assumed the denomination of Julius II.

Julius II.

V. To the odious lift of vices with which Julius II. dishonoured the pontificate, we may add the most savage ferocity, the most audacious arrogance, the most despotic vehemence of temper, and the most extravagant and phrenetic passion for war and bloodshed. He began his military enterprises by entering into a war with the Venetians, after having strengthened his cause by an alliance with the emperor and the king of France [d]. He

[d] See Du Bos, Histoire de la Ligue de Cambray, published at the Hague in two volumes 8vo, in the year 1710.

after-

[c] See the Life of Alexander VI. in two volumes 8vo. by Alex. Gordon, and also another life of the same pontiss, written with greater moderation, and subjoined, with that of Leo X. to the sirst volume of the learned and ingenious work entitled, Histoire du Droit publique Ecclesiassique François, par M. D. B. published in 4to at London, in 1752.

CENT. XVI.

afterwards laid siege to Ferrara; and, at length, turned his arms against his former ally, the French monarch, in conjunction with the Venetians, Spa-niards, and Swiss, whom he had drawn into this war, and engaged in his cause by an offensive league. His whole pontificate, in short, was one continued scene of military tumult; nor did he suffer Europe to enjoy a moment's tranquillity as long as he lived. We may easily imagine the miserable condition of the church under a vicar of Christ, who lived in camps, amidst the din of arms, and who was ambitious of no other fame than that which arose from battles won and cities desolated. Under such a pontiff all things must have gone to ruin; the laws must have been subverted, the discipline of the church destroyed, and the genuine lustre of true religion entirely effaced.

VI. Nevertheless, from this dreadful cloud that The council hung over Europe, some rays of light seemed to break forth, that promised a better state of things, and gave some reason to expect that reformation in the church which was so generally and so ardently desired. Louis XII. king of France, provoked by the insults he had received from this arrogant pontiff, meditated revenge, and even caused a medal to be struck with a menacing inscription, expressing his resolution to overturn the power of Rome, which was represented by the title of Babylon, on this coin [e]. Several cardinals also, encouraged by the protection of this monarch and the emperor Maximilian I. assembled, in the year 1511, a council at Pisa, with an intention to fet bounds to the tyranny of this furious pontiff, and to correct and reform the errors and corrup-Julius, on the tions of a superstitious church. other hand, relying on his own strength, and on the power of his allies, beheld these threatening appearances without the least concern, and even treated them with mockery and laughter. He did not, however, neglect the methods of rendering ineffectual the efforts of his enemies, that prudence dictated, and therefore gave orders for a council to meet in the Lateran palace in the year 1512 [f], in which the decrees of the council of Pisa were condemned and annulled in the most injurious and insulting terms. This condemnation would, undoubtedly, have been followed with the most dire and formidable anathemas against Louis and other princes, had not death carried off this audacious pontiff in 1512, in the midst of his ambitious and vindictive projects.

[e] See B. Christ. Sigismund. Liebii Commentatio de nummis Ludovici XII. Epigraphe, Perdam Babylonis nomen, insignibus; Leipsic, 1717 .- See also Thefaurus Epistolicus Crozianus, tom. i. p. 238. 243.—Colonia, Histoire Liter. de la Ville de Lyon, tome ii. p. 443.—The authenticity and occasion of this medal have been much disputed, and, as is well known, have, afforded matter of keen debate.

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1.

Leo X.

VII. He was succeeded, in the year 1513, by Leo X. of the family of Medicis, who, though of a milder disposition than his predecessor, was equally indifferent about the interests of religion and the advancement of true piety. He was a protector of men of learning, and was himself learned as far as the darkness of the age would admit. His time was divided between conversation with men of letters and pleasure; though it must be observed, that the greatest part of it was confecrated to the latter. He had an invincible aversion to whatever was accompanied with solicitude and care, and discovered the greatest impatience under events of that nature. He was remarkable for his prodigality, luxury, and imprudence, and has even been charged with impiety, if not atheism. He did not, however, promoting and advancing the opulence and gran-deur of the Roman see. For he took the utmost lose fight of the grand object which the generality CENT. of his predecessors had so much at heart,—that of care that nothing should be transacted in the Lateran council, (which Julius had affembled and left fitting,) that had the least tendency to favour the reformation of the church. He went still farther; and, in a conference which he had with Francis I. king of France, at Bologna, he engaged that monarch to abrogate the Pragmatic Sanction[g], which had been so long odious to the popes, and to substitute in its place another body of laws, more advantageous to the papacy; which he accordingly imposed upon his subjects under the title of the Concordat, but not without their utmost indignation and reluctance  $\lceil b \rceil$ .

[f] Harduini Concilia, tom. ix. p. 1559.

VIII. The

[g] We have mentioned this Pragmatic Santtion, Cent. XV. Part II. Chap. II. sect. xvi. note [n], and given there some account of its nature and defign. This important edict is published at large in the eighth volume of the Concilia Harduini, p. 1949. as is the Concordat in the ninth volume, p. 1867. and in Leibnitz' Mantissa Codicis Diplomat. part I. p. 158. part II. p. 358.—The history of these two pieces is given in an ample and accurate manner by bishop Burnet, in his History of the Reformation, vol. iii. p. 3 .- See also on the same subject, Boulay's Hist. Acad. Paris. tom. vi. p. 61.—109. Du Clos, Histoire de Louis XI.—Histoire du Droit Ecclesiastique François, tome i. Diff. ix. p. 415.—Menagiana, tome iii. p. 285.

[b] The king went in person to the parliament to offer the Concordat to be registered; and letters patent were made out, requiring all the judges and courts of justice to observe this AB, and see it executed. The parliament, after deliberating a month upon this important matter, concluded not to register the Concordat, but to observe still the Pragmatic Sanction, unless the new edict should be received and established in as great an affembly as that was, which publisted the other in the reign of Charles VII. And when by violence and force they were obliged to publish the Concordat, they joined to this publication a solemn protest, and an appeal from the pope to the next general council; into both which measures the university and the clergy entered with the greatest alacrity and zeal. But royal and papal despotism at length prevailed.

The

CENT. XVI. SECT. I. of the popes.

VIII. The raging thirst of dominion that confumed these pontiffs, and their arrogant endeavours to crush and oppress all who came within the reach of their power, were accompanied with the most insatiable avarice. All the provinces of Europe were, in a manner, drained to enrich these spiritual tyrants, who were perpetually gaping'

> The chancellor Du Prat who was principally concerned in promoting the Concordat, has been generally regarded as an enemy to the liberties of the Gallican church. The illustrious and learned prefident Henault has not, however, hesitated to defend his memory against this accusation, and to justify the Concordat as an equitable contract, and as a measure attended with less inconvenience than the Pragmatic Sanction. He obferves, that by the king's being invested, by the Concordat, with the privilege of nominating to the bishoprics and vacant benefices of the first class, many corruptions and abuses were prevented, which arose from the simoniacal practices that prevailed almost every where, while, according to the Pragmatic Santtion, every church chose its bishop, and every monastery its abbot. He observes, moreover, that this nomination was the natural right of the crown, as the most considerable part of the great benefices had been created by the kings of France; and he insists particularly on this consideration, that the right which Christian communities have to choose their leaders, cannot be exercised by such large bodies without much consusion and many inconveniences: and that the subjects, by entrusting their sovereign with the government of the state, invest him, ipso fallo, with an authority over the church which is a part of the state, and its noblest branch. See Henault's Abregé Chronologique de l' Histoire de France, in the particular remarks that are placed at the end of the reign of Louis XIV.

The most specious objection that was made to the Concordat was this; that, in return for the nomination to the wacant benefices, the king granted to the popes the annates, or first fruits, which had so long been complained of as an intolerable grievance. There is, however, no mention of this equivalent in the Concordat; and it was by a papal bull that succeeded this compact, that the pontiffs claimed the payment of the first fruits, of which they had put themselves in posfession in the year 1316, and which had been suspended by the Pragmatic Santtion. See the Histoire du Droit Ecclesiaflique François. As this substitution of the Concordat for the Pragmatic Santien, was a most important transaction, and had very great influence upon the minds of the English, the frametor judged it necessary to give some account of that matter.:

after

CENT.

after new accessions of wealth, in order to augment the number of their friends and the stability of their AVI. dominion. And, indeed, according to the notions commonly entertained, the rulers of the church feemed to have a fair pretext, from the nature of their character, to demand a fort of tribute from their flock; for none can deny to the supreme governors of any state (and such was the character assumed by the popes) the privilege of levying tribute from those over whom they bear rule. But as the name of tribute obviously tended to alarm the jealousy and excite the indignation of the civil magistrate, the pontiffs were too cunning to employ it, and had recourse to various stratagems and contrivances to rob the subject without shocking the fovereign, and to levy taxes under the specious mask of religion. Among these contrivances, the distribution of indulgences, which enabled the wealthy to purchase impunity for their crimes by certain sums applied to religious uses, held an eminent rank. This traffic was renewed whenever the coffers of the church were exhausted. On these occasions, indulgences were warmly recommended to the ignorant multitude under some new and specious, yet fallacious pretext, and were greedily fought, to the great detriment both of individuals and of the community.

IX. Notwithstanding the veneration and homage The pope's that were paid to the Roman pontiffs, they were authority beld inferior far from being universally reputed infallible in to that of a their decisions, or unlimited in their authority. council. The wifer part of the German, French, Flemish, and British nations, considered them as liable to error, and bounded by law. The councils of Constance and Basil had contributed extremely to rectify the notions of the people in that respect; and from that period all Christians, except the superstitious monks and parasites of Rome, were persuaded CENT. XVI. SECT. I. persuaded that the pope was subordinate to a general council, that his decrees were not infallible, and that the council had a right to depose him, whenever he was convicted of gross errors or enormous crimes. Thus were the people, in some measure, prepared for the reformation of the church; and hence arose that ardent desire, that earnest expectation of a general council, which filled the minds of the wisest and best Christians in this century. Hence also those frequent appeals that were made to this approaching council, when the court of Rome issued any new edict, or made any new attempt repugnant to the dictates of piety and justice.

The corruption of the lower orders of the elergy.

7

X. The licentious examples of the pontiffs were zealously imitated in the lives and manners of the subordinate rulers and ministers of the church. The greatest part of the bishops and canons passed their days in dissolute mirth and luxury, and squandered away, in the gratification of their lusts and passions, the wealth that had been set apart for religious and charitable purposes. Nor were they less tyrannical than voluptuous; for the most despotic princes never treated their vassals with more rigour and severity, than these spiritual rulers employed towards all who were under their jurif-The decline of virtue among the clergy was attended with the loss of the public esteem; and the most considerable part of that once-respected body became, by their sloth and avarice, their voluptuousness and impurity, their ignorance and levity, contemptible and infamous, not only in the eyes of the wife and good, but also in the general judgment of the multitude [i].

[i] See Cornelii Aurelii Gandini Apocalypsis, seu Visio Mirabilis super miserabili Statu Matris Ecclesia, in Casp. Durmanni Analeti. Hist. de Hadriano VI. p. 245. printed in 1727.

Chap. I. The History of the Reformation.

Nor could the case be otherwise as matters were now constituted; for, as all the offices and dignities of the church had become venal, the way of preferment was inaccessible to merit, and the wicked and licentious were rendered capable of rising to the highest ecclesiastical honours.

XI. The prodigious swarms of monks that over- The thate of spread Europe were justly considered as burthens orders. to fociety, and occasioned frequent murmurs and complaints. And, nevertheless, such was the genius of the age, of an age that was but just emerging from the thickest gloom of ignorance, and was suspended, as it were, in a dubious situation between darkness and light, that these monastic drones would have remained undisturbed, had they taken the least pains to preserve any remains even of the external air of decency and religion, that used to distinguish them in former times. But the Benedictine and other monkish fraternities, who were invested with the privilege of possessing certain lands and revenues, broke through all restraint, made the worst possible use of their opulence, and, forgetful of the gravity of their character and of the laws of their order, rushed headlong into the shameless practice of vice in all its various kinds and degrees. On the other hand, the Mendicant orders, and especially those who followed the rules of St. Dominic and St. Francis, though they were not carried away with the torrent of licentiousness that was overwhelming the church, lost their credit in a different way; for their rustic impudence, their ridiculous superstitions, their ignorance, cruelty, and brutish manners, tended to alienate from them the minds of the people, and gradually diminished their reputation. They had the most barbarous aversion to the arts and sciences, and expresses a like abhorrence of tertain eminent and learned men, who, being YOL. IV. eager C eagerly desirous of opening the paths of science to the pursuit of the studious youth, recommended the culture of the mind, and attacked the barbarism of the age in their writings and in their discourse. This is sufficiently evident from what happened to Reuchlinus, Erasmus, and other learned men.

· The History of the Reformation.

CENT. XVL SECT. 1.

The Demi-

XII. Among all the monastic orders, none enjoyed a higher degree of power and authority than the Dominican friars, whose credit was great, and whose insluence was very widely extended. This will not appear furprising, when we consider that they filled very eminent stations in the church, presided every where over the terrible tribunal of the inquifition, and had the care of fouls, with the function of confessors, in all the courts of Europe; a circumstance which, in those times of ignorance and superstition, manifestly tended to put most of the European princes in their power. But, notwithstanding all this credit and authority, the Dominicans had their enemies; and about this time their influence began to decline. Several marks of perfidy, that appeared in the measures they employed to extend their authority, justly exposed than to the public indignation. Nothing could be more infamous than the frauds they practised to accomplish their purposes, as may be seen, among other examples, by the tragedy which they acted at Bern, in the year 1509 [k]. They were perpetually

Ruchat, at the end of the fixth volume of his Histoire de la Reformation en Suisse; and also by Hottinger, in his Histor. Eccles. Helvet. tom. i. p. 334. There is also a compendious, but distinct, narration of this infernal stratagem, in bishop Burnet's Travels through France, Italy, Germany, and Switzerland, p. 31. The stratagem in question was the consequence of a rivalry between the Franciscans and Dominicans, and more especially of their controversy concerning the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary. The former maintained that she was born without the blemish of original sin; the lattice effected the contrary. The doctrine of the Franciscans, in an age

Chap. I. The History of the Reformations

ΙŢ

perpetually employed in stigmatising, with the CENT. opprobrious mark of heresy, numbers of learned and —

age of darkness and superstition, could not but be popular; and hence the Dominicans loft ground from day to day. To support the credit of their order, they resolved, at a chapter held at Vimplen in the year 1504, to have recourse to fictitions visions and dreams, in which the people at that time had an easy faith; and they determined to make Bern the scene of their operations. A person named Jetzer, who was extremely simple, and much inclined to austerities, and who had taken their habit, as a lay-brother, was chosen as the infirument of the delusions they were contriving. One of the four Dominicans, who had undertaken the management of this plot, conveyed himself secretly into Jetzer's cell, and about midnight appeared to him in a horrid figure, furrounded with howling dogs, and seeming to blow fire from his nostrils, by the means of a box of combustibles which he held near his mouth. In this frightful form he approached Jetzer's bed, told him that he was the ghost of a Dominican, who had been killed at Paris, as a judgment of Heaven for laying afide his monastic habit; that he was condemned to purgatory for this crime; adding, at the same time, that, by his means, he might be rescued from his misery, which was beyond expression. This story, accompanied with horrible cries and howlings, frighted poor Jetzer out of the little wits he had, and engaged him to promife to do all that was in his power to deliver the Dominican from his torment. Upon this the impostor told him, that nothing but the most extraordinary mortifications, such as the Discipline of the Whip, performed during eight days by the whole monastery, and Jetzer's lying proftrate in the form of one crucified in the chapel during maís, could contribute to his deliverance. He added, that the performance of these mortifications would draw down upon Jetzer the peculiar protection of the Blessed Virgin; and concluded by faying, that he would appear to him again, accompanied with two other spirits. Morning was no sooner come, than Jetzer gave an account of this apparition to the reft of the convent, who unanimously advised him to undergo the discipline that was enjoined him; and every one consented to bear his share of the task imposed. The deluded fimpleton obeyed, and was admired as a faint by the multitudes that crowded about the convent, while the four friars who managed the imposture, magnified, in the most pompous manner, the miracle of this apparition, in their fermons and in their conversation. The night after, the apparition was renewed with the addition of two impostors, dressed like devils; and Jetzer's faith was augmented by hearing from the spectre

CENT. and pious men, in encroaching upon the rights and property of others to augment their possessions, all the secrets of his life and thoughts, which the impostors had learned from his confessor. In this and some subsequent scenes (the detail of whole enormities, for the lake of brevity, we shall here omit) the impostor talked much to Jetzer of the Dominican order, which he faid was peculiarly dear to the bleffed Virgin; he added, that the Virgin knew herself to be conceived in original fin; that the doctors who taught the contrary were in purgatory: that the bleffed Virgin abhorred the Franciscans for making her equal with her son; and that the town of Bern would be destroyed for harbouring such plagues within her walls. In one of these apparitions, Jetzer imagined that the voice of the spectre resembled that of the prior of the convent, and this was not a mistake; but, not suspecting a fraud, he gave little attention to this. The prior appeared in various forms, sometimes in that of St. Barhara, at others in that of St. Bernard; at length he assumed that of the Virgin Mary, and, for that purpole, clothed himself in the habits that were employed to adorn her statue on the great festivals; the little images, that on these days are set on the alters, were used for angels, which being tied to a cord that passed through a pulley over Jetzer's head, role up and down, and danced about the pretended virgin to increase the delusion. The Virgin, thus equipped, addressed a long discourse to Jetzer, in which, among other things, she told him that she was conceived in miginal sin, though she had remained but a short time under that blemish. She gave him, as a miraculous proof of her presence, a bost, or consecrated wafer, which turned from white to red in a moment; and after various visits, in which the greatest enormities were transacted, the Virgin-prior told Jetzer, that she would give him the most affecting and undoubted marks of her Son's love, by imprinting on him the five wounds that pierced Jesus on the cross, as she had done before to St. Lucia and St. Catharine. Accordingly, she took his hand by force, and struck a large nail through it, which threw the poor dupe into the greatest terment. The next night this masculine virgin brought, as she pretended, some of the linen, in which Christ had been buried, to soften the wound, and gave Jetzer a soporific draught, which had in it the blood of an unbaptized child, some grains of incense and of consecrated salt, some quicksilver, the hairs of the eye-brows of a child, all which, with some stupifying and poisonous ingredients, were mingled by the prior with magin ceremonies, and a solemn dedication of himself to the devil in hope of his succour. This draught threw the poor wretch into a fort of lethargy, dufling which

fions, and in laying the most iniquitous snares and CENT.

stratagems for the destruction of their adversa-

which the monks imprinted on his body the other four wounds of Christ in such a manner that he felt no pain. When he awoke he found, to his unspeakable joy, these impressions on his body, and came at last to fancy himself a representative of Christ in the various parts of his passion. He was, in this state, exposed to the admiring multitude on the principal altar of the convent, to the great mortification of the Franciscans. The Dominicans gave him some other draughts, that threw him into convultions, which were followed by a voice conveyed thro' a pipe into the mouths of two images, one of Mary, the other of the child Jesus; the former of which had tears painted upon its cheeks in a lively manner. The little Jesus asked his mother, by means of this voice, (which was that of the prior,) why she wept; and she answered, that her tears were occasioned by the impious manner in which the Franciscans attributed to her the honour that was due to bim, in faying that she was conceived and born without fin.

The apparitions, false prodigies, and abominable stratagems of these Dominicans, were repeated every night; and the matter was at length so grossly over-acted, that, simple as Jetzer was, he at last discovered it, and had almost killed the prior, who appeared to him one night in the form of the Virgin with a crown on her head. The Dominicans fearing, by this discovery, to lose the fruits of their importure, thought the best method would be to own the whole matter to Jetzer, and to engage him, by the most seducing promises of opulence and glory, to carry on the delusion. Jetzer was persuaded, or at least appeared to be so. But the Dominicans, suspecting that he was not entirely gained over, resolved to poison him; but his constitution was so vigorous, that though they gave him poison five times, he was not destroyed by it. One day they sent him a loaf prepared with some spices, which growing green in a day or two, he threw a piece of it to a wolf's whelps that were in the monastery, and it killed them immediately. At another time they poisoned the boft, or consecrated wafer; but as he vomited it soon after he swallowed it, he escaped once more. In short, there were no means of securing him, which the oft detestable impiety and barbarity could invent, that they did not put in practice, till, finding at last an opportunity of getting out of the convent, he threw himself into the hands of the magistrates, to whom he made a full discovery of this infernal plot. This intelligence being brought to Rome, commissaries were sent to examine the affair; and the whole imposture being fully proved, the four friars were folemnly de-C 3 graded ries [1]. And they were the principal counsellors by whose instigation and advice Leo X. was determined to that most rash and imprudent measure, even the public condemnation of Luther.

CENT. XVI. SECT. I.

The state of learning and of the public schools.

XIII. The principal places in the public schools of learning were filled very frequently by monks of the mendicant orders. This unhappy circumstance prevented their emerging from that ignorance and darkness which had so long enveloped them; and it also rendered them inaccessible to that auspicious light of improved science, whose falutary beams had already been felt in feveral of the European countries. The instructors of youth, dignified with the venerable titles of artists, grammarians, philosophers, and dialecticians, loaded the memories of their laborious pupils with a certain quantity of barbarous terms, arid and fenfeless diftinctions, and scholastic precepts delivered in the most inelegant style; and all such as could this jargon with readiness and rapidity, were considered as men of uncommon eloquence and erudition. The whole body of the philosophers extolled Aristotle beyond fure; while scarcely any studied him, and none understood him. For what was now exhibited, as the philosophy of that famous .Grecian graded from their priesthood, and were burned alive on the last day of May, 1509. Jetzer died some time after at Constance, having poisoned himself, as was believed by some. Had his life been taken away before he had found an opportunity of making the discovery already mentioned, this execrable and howid plot, which, in many of its circumstances, was conducted with art, would have been handed down to posterity as a stupendous miracle. This is a very brief account of the matter; such as are desirous of a more circumstantial relation of this famous imposture, may consult the authors mentioned in the beginning of this note.

[1] See Bilib. Pirkheimeri Epistola ad Hadrianum Pontif. Maxim. de Dominicanorum flagitiis, in operibus ejus, p. 372. This letter is also to be found in Gerdesii Introd. ad Histor.

Resevati Evangelii, tom. i. p. 170. Append.

fage

fage, was really nothing more than a confused CENT. and motley heap of obscure notions, sentences, XVI. and divisions, which even the public doctors and heads of schools were unable to comprehend. And if, among these thorns of scholastic wisdom, there was any thing that had the appearance of fruit, it was crushed and blasted by the furious wranglings and disputes of the Scotists and Thomists, the Realists and Nominalists, whose clamours and contentions were unhappily heard in all the European colleges.

XIV. The wretched and senseless manner of The state of teaching theology in this century, may be learn- theology. ed from many books yet extant, which were written by the divines it produced, and which, in reality, have no other merit than their enormous bulk. There were very few expositors of the holy scriptures during this century; and scarcely any of the Christian doctors had a critical knowledge of the facred oracles. This kind of knowledge was so rare, that, when Luther arofe, there could not be found, even the university of Paris, which was regarded as the first and most famous of all the public schools of learning, a single person qualified to dispute with him, or oppose his doctrine upon a scriptural foundation. Any commentators, that were at this time to be found, were fuch as, laying aside all attention to the true meaning and force of the words of scripture, which their profound ignorance of the original languages and of the rules of criticism rendered them incapable of investigating, gave a loose to their vain and irregular fancies, in the pursuit of mysterious fignifications. The greatest part of the public teachers belonged to the classes of divines, already mentioned under the titles of Positivi and Sententiarii, who were extremely fond, the former of loading their accounts, both of the truths C 4

XVI.

truths and precepts of religion, with multiplied quotations and authorities from the writings of the ancient doctors; the latter of explaining the doctrines of the gospel by the rules of a subtile and intricate philosophy.

The liberty of debating religions fut jects.

XV. It must at the same time be observed, that the divines of this century disputed with great freedom upon religious subjects, even upon those that were looked upon as most essential to salvation. There were several points of doctrine, which had not yet been mined by the authority of the church; did the pontiffs, without some very urgent reason, sestrain the right of private judgment, or force the consciences of men, except in those cases where doctrines were adopted that seemed detrimental to the supremacy of the apostolic see, or to the temporal interests of the sacerdotal and monastic orders. Hence it is, that we could mention many Christian doctors before Luther, who inculcated not only with impunity, but even with applause, the very same tenets that afterwards drew upon him fuch heavy accusations and such bitter reproaches. And it is beyond all doubt, that this great reformer might have propagated these opinions without any danger of molestation, had he not pointed his warm remonstrances against the opulence of Rome, the overgrown fortunes of the bishops, the majesty of the pontiffs, and the towering ambition of the Dominicans,

The pature of religious worthip as it ed at this

XVI. The public worship of the Deity was now no more than a pompous round of external ceremonies, the greatest part of which were insignificant and fenseless, and much more adapted to dazzle the eyes than to touch the heart. those who were at all qualified to administer public instruction to the people the number was not very considerable; and their discourses, which contained contained little beside sictitious reports of miracles CENT. and prodigies, insipid fables, wretched quibbles, XVI. and illiterate jargon, deceived the multitude instead of instructing them. Several of these sermons are yet extant, which it is impossible to read without the highest indignation and contempt. Those who, on account of their gravity of manners, or their supposed superiority in point of wildom and knowledge, held the most distinguished rank among these vain declaimers, had a common-place set of subjects allotted to them, on which they were constantly exercising the force of their lungs and the power of their eloquence. These subjects were, the authority of the holy mother church, and the obligation of obedience to her decisions; the virtues and merits of the faints, and their credit in the court of heaven; the dignity, glory, and love of the bleffed Virgin; the efficacy of relics; the duty adorning churches, and endowing monasteries; the necessity of good works (as that phrase was then understood) to salvation; the intolerable burnings of purgatory, and the utility of indulgences. Such were the topics that employed the zeal and labours of the most eminent doctors of this century; and they were, indeed, the only subjects that could tend to fill the coffers of the good old mother church, and advance her temporal interests. Ministers who would have taken it into their heads to inculcate the doctrines and precepts of the gospel, to exhibit the example of its divine author, and the efficacy of his mediation, as the most powerful motives to righteousness and virtue, and to represent the love of God and mankind as the great duties of the Christian life, would have been very unprofitable fervants to church and to the papacy, however they might have promoted the cause of virtue and the salvation of fouls.

Chap. I. The History of the Reformation.

XVII. From

The Harry of the Reformation.

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1.

The corrupt and miterable condition of the people in general.

XVII. From this state of affairs we may draws conclusions respecting the true causes of that incredible ignorance in religious matters, which reigned in all countries, and among all ranks and orders of men; an ignorance accompanied with the vilest forms of superstition, and the greatest corruption of manners. The clergy, who prefided over the rites and ceremonies of the church, were far from shewing the least disposition to enlighten the ignorance, or to check the superstition of the times: instead of opposing, they even nourished and promoted them, as conducive to their safety, and davourable to their interests. Nor was there more zeal shewn in stemming the torrent of immorality and licentiousness, than in dispelling the clouds of superstition and ignorance; for the prudence of the church had easily foreseen, that the traffic of indulgences could not but suffer from a diminution of the crimes and vices of mankind, and that, in proportion as virtue gained an afcendency upon the manners of the multitude, the profits arising from expiations, satisfactions, and the like ecclesiastical contrivances, must necessarily decrease.

A reformation in the church ardently defired. XVIII. Such was the difinal condition of the church. Its corruption was complete, and the abuses that its rulers permitted had reached the greatest height of enormity. Proportioned to the greatness of this corruption was the impatient ardour with which all, who were endowed with any tolerable portion of solid learning, genuine piety, or even good sense, desired to see the church reformed and purged from these shocking abuses. And the number of those who were affected in this manner was very considerable in all parts of the western world. The greatest part of them, indeed, were perhaps over-moderate in their demands. They did not extend their views to a change in the form of ecclesiastical govern- CENT. ment, a suppression of those doctrines, which, sect. however absurd, had acquired a high degree of credit by their antiquity, or even to an abrogation of those rites and ceremonies, which had been multiplied in fuch an extravagant manner, to the great detriment of true religion and rational piety. All they aimed at was, to fet limits to the overgrown power of the pontiffs, reform the corrupt manners of the clergy, and prevent the frauds that were too commonly practifed by that order of men; to dispel the ignorance and correct the errors of the blinded multitude, and to deliver them from the heavy and insupportable burthens that were imposed upon them under religious pretexts. But as it was impossible to obtain any of these falutary purposes without the suppression of various absurd and impious opinions, from which the grievances complained of sprang; or, indeed, without a general reformation of the religion that was publicly professed; so is this reformation supposed to have been ardently, though flently wished for, by all those who publicly demanded the reformation of the church in its head and in its members.

XIX. If any sparks of real piety subsisted under The Mystics, this despotic empire of superstition, they were only to be found among the Mystics. For this sect, renouncing the subtilty of the schools, the vain contentions of the learned, and all the acts and ceremonies of external worship, exhorted their followers to aim at nothing but internal fanctity of heart, and communion with God, the centre and fource of holiness and perfection. Hence the Mystics were loved and respected by many persons, who had a serious sense of religion and a devotional frame of mind. Yet, as they were not entirely free from the reigning superstitions, but affociated many vulgar errors with their practical practical precepts and directions;—and as their excessive passion for contemplation led them into chimerical notions, and sometimes into a degree of fanaticism that approached to madness; more effectual succours than theirs were necessary to combat the inveterate errors of the times, and to bring about the reformation that was expected with fuch impatience.

28

CENT.

CHAP. II.

The History of the Reformation, from its commencement to the Confession of Augsburg.

on rifes unexpectedly.

The dawn of I. W HILE the Roman pontiff slumbered in sectormafectories upon to the church, and Taw nothing throughout the vast extent of his dominion but tranquillity and submission; and while the worthy and pious professors of genuine Christianity almost despaired of seeing that reformation on which their most ardent desires and expectations were bent; an obscure and inconsiderable person suddenly arose in the year 1517, and laid the foundation of this long-expected change, by opposing, with undaunted resolution, his single force to the torrent of papal ambition and despotism. This extraordinary man was Martin Luther, a native of Eisleben in Saxony, a monk of the Augustinian Eremites (one of the Mendicant and, at the same time, professor of divinity in the academy that had been erected at Wittenberg, a few years before this period, by Frederic the Wise. The papal chair was, at that time, filled by Leo X. Maximilian I. a prince of the house of Austria, was king of the Romans and emperor of Germany; and Frederic, already mentioned, was elector of Saxony.

The bold efforts of this new adversary of the pon- CENT. tiffs were honoured with the applause of many; but few or none entertained confident hopes of his success. It feemed scarcely possible that this puny David could hurt a Goliah, whom so many heroes had opposed in vain.

II. None of the qualities or talents that dif- Lube tinguished Luther were of a common or ordinary kind. His genius was truly great and unparalleled; his memory vast and tenacious; his patience in supporting trials, difficulties, and labour, incredible; his magnanimity invincible, and unshaken by the vicissitudes of human affairs; and his learning most extensive, considering the age in which he lived. All this will be acknowledged, even by his enemies, at least by such of them as are not totally blinded by a spirit of partiality and faction. He was deeply versed in the theology and philosophy that were in vogue in the schools during this century, and he taught them both with great reputation and success in the academy of Wittenberg. As a philosopher, he mbraced the doctrine of the Nominalists, which was the fystem adopted by his order; while, in divinity, he followed chiefly the sentiments of Augustin; but in both he preferred the decisions of Scripture, and the dictates of right reason, to the authority and opinions of fallible men. It would be equally rash and absurd to represent this great man as exempt from error, and free from infirmities and defects; yet, if we except the contagious effects of the age in which he fived, and of the religion in which he had been brought up, we shall perhaps find few points of his character that render him liable to reproach  $\lceil m \rceil$ .

III. The

[m] The writers who have given a circumstantial account of litther and his transactions, are accurately enumerated by Jo. Alb.

CENT.
XVR
SECT. 1.
Indulgences preached up
by John Tegzel in 1517.

III. The first opportunity that this great man had of unfolding, to the view of a blinded and deluded age, the truth which had struck his astonished fight, was offered by a Dominican, whose name was John Tetzel [n]. This bold and enterprifing monk had been chosen on account of his uncommon impudence, by Albert, archbishop of Mentz and Magdeburg, to preach and proclaim, in Germany, those famous indulgences of Leo X. which administered the remission of all sins, past, present, and to come, however enormous their nature, to those who were rich enough to purchase them. The frontless monk executed this iniquitous commission not only with matchless insolence, indecency [o] and fraud, but even carried his impiety so far as to derogate from the all-sufficient power and influence of the merits of Christ. At this, Luther, unable to repress his just indignation, raised his warning voice, and, in ninetyfive propositions (maintained publicly at Wittenberg, on the 30th of September, 1517), cenfured the extravagant extortion of these quæstors, and plainly pointed out the Roman pon tiff as a partaker of their guilt, since he suffered the people to be seduced, by such delusions, from

Jo. Alb. Fabricius, in his Centifolium Lutheranum; the first part of which was published at Hamburg in the year 1728, and the second in 1730, in 8vo.

[n] The historians who have particularly mentioned Tetzel, and his odious methods of deluding the multitude, are enumerated in the work quoted in the preceding note, part I. p. 47. part II. p. 530.—What is said of this vile deceiver by Echand and Quetif, in the Scriptores Ordin. Pradicator. tom. ii. p. 40. discovers the blindest zeal and the meanest partiality.

[0] In describing the efficacy of these indulgences, Tetzel said, among other enormities, that "even had any one ravished the mother of God, he (Tetzel) had wherewithal to efface his guilt." He also boasted, that "he had saved more souls from hell by these indulgences, than St. Peter had converted to Christianity by his preaching."

placing

placing their principal confidence in Christ, the only proper object of their trust. This was the commencement and foundation of that membrable rupture and revolution in the :hurch, which humbled the grandeur of the lordly pontiffs, and eclipfed fo great a part of their glory [p].

IV. This

[p] Dr. Mosheim has taken no notice of the calumnies invented and propagated by some late authors, in order to make Luther's zealous opposition to the publication of Indulgences appear to be the effect of selfish and ignoble motives. It may not, therefore, be improper to let that point in a true light; not that the cause of the reformation (which must stand by its own intrinfic dignity, and is in no way affected by the views or characters of its instruments) can derive any strength from this inquiry; but as it may tend to vindicate the personal characer of a man, who has done eminent service to the cause of religion.

Mr. Hume, in his History of the Reign of Henry VIII. has thought proper to repeat what the enemies of the reformation, and some of its dubious or ill-informed friends, have advanced, with respect to the motives that engaged Luther to eppose the doctrine of indulgences. This elegant biforian affirms, that the "Augustin friars had employed in Saxony to preach indulgences, and from this trust had derived both profit and consideration; that Arcemboldi gave this occupation to the Dominicans; that Martin Luther, an Augustin friar, professor in the univerfity of Wittenberg, resenting the affront put upon his order, began to preach against the abuses that were committed in the fale of indulgences, and, being provoked by opposition, proceeded even to decry indulgences themselves." It is to be wished, that Mr. Hume's candour had engaged him to examine this accusation better, before he had ventured to repeat it. For, in the first place, it is not true, that the Augustin friars bad been usually employed in Saxony to preach indulgences. It is well known, that the commission had been offered alternately, and sometimes jointly, to all the Mendicants, whether Augustin friars, Dominicans, Franciscans, or Carmelites. From the year 1229, that lucrative commission was principally entrusted with the Domizicans*; and, in the records which relate to indulgences, we rarely .

See Meiseanni Memorebilia Historise Sacree N. T. p. 1051. 1114.

SEN XVI.

The true tinte of the debate betweether ther and Texas. IV. This debate between Luther and Tetzel was, at first, a matter of no great moment, and might rarely meet with the name of an Augustin friar, and not a single act by which it appears, that the Roman pontiff ever named the friars of that order to the office under consideration. More particularly it is remarkable, that for half a century before Luther, (i. e. from 1450 to 1517,) during which period indulgences were fold with the most scandalous marks of avaricious extortion and impudence, we scarcely find an Augustin friar mentioned as being employed in that service; if we except a monk named Palzius, who was no more than an underling of the papal quæstor Raymond Peraldus; so far is it from being true, that the Augustin monks were exclusively, or even usually, jengaged in that service *. Mr. Hume has built his affertion upon the sole authority of a single expression of Paul Sarpi, which has been abundantly refuted by De Priero, Pallavicini, and Graweson, the mortal enemies of Luther.—But it may be alleged, that, even supposing it was not usual, to employ the Augustin friars alone in the propagation of indulgences, yet Luther might be offended at seeing such an important commission given to the Dominicans exclusively, and that, consequently, this was his motive in opposing the propagation of indulgences. To shew the injustice of this allegation, I observe,

Secondly, That, in the time of Luther, the preaching of indulgences had become such an odious and unpopular matter, that it is far from being probable, that Luther would have be folicitous about obtaining such a commission, either for himself or for his order. The princes of Europe, with many bishops, and multitudes of learned and pious men, had opened their eyes upon the turpitude of this infamous traffic; and even the Franciscans and Dominicans, towards the conclusion of the fifteenth century, opposed it publicly, both in their discourses and in their writings +. The very commission which is supposed to have excited the envy of Luther, was offered by Leo to the general of the Franciscans, and was refused both by him and his order 1, who gave it over entirely to Albert, bishop of Mentz and Magdeburg. Is it then to be imagined, that either Luther, or the other Augustin friars, aspired after a commission of which the Franciscans were ashamed? Besides, it is a mistake to affirm, that this office was given to * See Harpii Dissertat. de Nonsullis Indulgentiarum (Sec. xiv. et xv. Questioribus, p. 384. 387.

the

† See Walch. op. Luther, tom. xv. p. 114. 283. 312. 349.—Seckendorf. Hist. Lutheranismi, lib. i. sect. vi. p. 13.

1 Waleh. loc. eit. p. 371.

might have been determined with the utmost CENT. facility, had Leo been disposed to follow the healing - the Dominicans in general; for it was given to Tetzel alone, an individual member of that order, who had been notorious for his profligacy, barbarity, and extortion.

But that neither refentment nor envy were the motives that led Luther to oppose the doctrine and publication of indulgences, will appear with the utmost evidence, if we consider in the third place, That he was never accused of any such motives; either in the edicts of the positiffs of his time, or amidst the other reproaches of the contemporary writers, who defended the cause of Rome, and who were far from being sparing of their invectives and calumnies. All the contemporary adverfaries of Luther are absolutely silent on this head. From the year 1517 to 1546, when the dispute about indulgences was carried on with the greatest warmth and animosity, not one writer ever ventured to reproach Luther with these ignoble motives of opposition now under consideration. I speak not of Erasmus, Sleidan, De Thou, Guicciardini, and others, whose testimony might be perhaps suspected of partiality in his favour, but I speak of Caietan, Hoogstrat, De Priero, Emser, and even the infamous John Tetzel, whom Luther opposed with such vehemence and bitterness. Even Cochlæus was silent on this head during the life of Luther; though, after the death of that great reformer, he broached the calumny I am here refuting. But such was the scandalous character of this man, who was Morious for fraud, calumny, lying, and their fifter vices*, that Pallavicini, Bossuet, and other enemies of Luther, were ashamed to make use either of his name or testimony. Now, may it not be fairly presumed, that the contemporaries of Luther were better judges of his character, and of the principles from which he acted, than those who lived in after-times? Can it be imagined, that motives to action, which escaped the prying eyes of Luther's contemporaries, should have discovered themselves to us, who live at such a distance of time from the scene of zelion, to M. Bossuet, to Mr. Hume, and to other abettors of this ill-contrived and foolish story. Either there are no rules of moral evidence, or Mr. Hume's affertion is entirely groundkess.

I might add many other confiderations, to shew the unreaforableness of supposing that Luther exposed himself to the rage of the Roman pontiff, to the perfecutions of an exaspe-healing method which common prudence must have naturally pointed out on fuch an occasion. For, after all, this was no more than a private dispute between two monks, concerning the extent of the pope's power with respect to the remission of sin. Luther confessed that the Roman pontist was invested with the power of remitting the buman punishments denounced against transgressors, i. e. the punishments ordained by the church, and its visible head, the bishop of Rome; but he strenuoully denied that his power extended to the remifsion of the divine punishments allotted to offenders, either in the present or in a future state; affirming, on the contrary, that these punishments could only be removed by the merits of Christ, or by voluntary acts of mortification and penance, undertaken and performed by the transgressor. The doctrine of Tetzel was directly opposite to the fentiments of Luther; for that fenfeless and defigning monk afferted, that all punishments, prefent and future, human and divine, were fubmitted to the authority of the pope, and came within the reach of his absolving power. This matter had often been debated before the present period; but the popes had always been prudent enough to leave it undecided. These debates, however, being sometimes treated with neglect, and at others carried on without wisdom, the seeds of discord imperceptibly gained new accessions of strength and vigour, and from small beginnings produced, at length, events. of the most momentous nature.

Sleidan de Statu Rel, et Reip. in Dedie. Epist. ad August. Elector.

CENT, XVI. SECT. I.

rated clergy, to the severity of such a potent and despotic prince as Charles V. and to the risque of death itself, from a principle of avarice and ambition. But I have said enough to satisfy every candid mind.

V. The fentiments of Luther were received with applause by the greatest part of Germany, which had long groaned under the avarice of the pontiffs, and the extortions of their tax-gatherers, and had The advermurmured grievously against the various strata- Luther, and gems that were daily put in practice, with the most of Tetzel. shameless impudence, to fleece the rich, and to grind the faces of the poor. But the votaries of Rome were filled with horror, when they were informed of the opinions propagated by the Saxon reformer; more especially the Dominicans, who looked upon their order as infulted and attacked in the person of Tetzel. The alarm of controversy was therefore founded, and Tetzel himself appeared immediately in the field against Luther, whose sentiments he pretended to refute in two academical discourses, which he pronounced on occasion of his promotionto the degree of doctor in divinity. In the year following (1518) two famous Dominicans, Sylvester de Priero and Hoogstrat, the former a native of Italy, and the latter a German, rose up also against the adventurous reformer, and attacked him at Gelogne with the utmost vehemence and ardour. Their example was foon followed by another formidable champion, named Eckius, a celebrated professor of divinity at Ingolstadt, and one of the most zealous supporters of the Dominican order. Luther stood firm against these united adversaries, and was neither vanquished by their arguments, nor daunted by their talents and reputation; but answered their objections, and resuted their reasonings with the greatest strength of evidence, and a becoming spirit of resolution and perseverance. At the fame time, he addressed himself by letters, written in the most submissive and respectful terms, to the pope and to several of the bishops, shewing them the uprightness of his intentions, as well as the justice of his cause, and declaring his readiness

CENT XVI. SECT. Ii faries of

CENT. to change his fentiments, as foon as he should see XVI. them fairly proved to be erroneous.

A conference between Luther and Caietan at Augsburg.

VI. At first, Leo beheld this controversy with indifference and contempt; but, being informed by the emperor Maximilian not only of its importance, but also of the fatal divisions it was likely to produce in Germany, he summoned Luther to appear before him at Rome, and there to plead the cause which he had undertaken to maintain. This papal citation was superseded by Frederic the Wise, elector of Saxony, who pretended, that the cause of Luther belonged to the jurisdiction of a German tribunal, and that it was to be decided by the ecclesiastical laws of the empire. The pontiff yielded to the remonstrances of this prudent and magnanimous prince, and ordered Luther to justify his intentions and doctrines before cardinal Caietan, who was at this time legate at the diet of Aug/burg. In this first step the court of Rome gave a specimen of that temerity and imprudence with which all its negotiations, in this weighty affair, were afterwards conducted. For, instead of reconciling, nothing could tend more to inflame matters than the choice of Caietan, a Dominican, and, consequently, the declared enemy of Luther and friend of Tetzel, as judge and arbitrator in this nice and perilous controversy.

The iffue of this confer-

VII. Luther, however, repaired to Augsburg, in the month of October, 1518, and conferred, at three different meetings, with Caietan himself [q], concerning the points in debate. But had he even been disposed to yield to the court of Rome, this imperious legate was, of all others, the most improper to encourage him in the execution of such a purpose. The high spirit of Luther was not to be tamed by the arrogant dictates of mere authority; such, however, were the only methods of persuasion employed by the haughty cardinal. He, in an overbearing tone, defired Luther to renounce his opinions, without even attempting to prove them erroneous, and insisted, with importunity, on his confessing humbly his fault, and submitting respectfully to the judgement of the Roman pontiff[r]. The Saxon reformer could not think of yielding to terms so unreasonable in themselves, and fo despotically proposed; so that the conferences were absolutely without effect. For Luther, finding his adversary and judge inaccessible to reason and argument, suddenly left Augsburg, after having appealed from the pope's present decision to that which he should pronounce when better informed; and, in this step, he seemed yet to respect the dignity and authority of the bishop of Rome [s]. But Leo, on the other hand, let loose the reins to ambition and despotism, and carried things to extremities; for, in the month of November, this same year, he published an edict, commanding his spiritual subjects to acknowledge [r] The imperious and imprudent manner in which Caietan behaved towards Luther was highly disapproved, even at the court of Rome, as appears, among other testimonies, from Paolo Sarpi's History of the council of Trent, book I. p. 22. The conduct of Caietan is defended by Echard, in his Scriptor. Ord. Predicator, tom. ii. p. 15, but with little prudence and less argument. The truth is, that the court of Rome, and its unthinking sovereign, were not less culpable than Caietan in the whole of this transaction; since they might easily foresee, that a Dominican legate was of all others the most unlikely to treat Luther with moderation and impartiality, and confequently the most improper to reconcile matters.

luch

[q] There is an ample account of this cardinal given by Quetif and Echard, Scriptor. Ordin. Pradicator. tom. ii. p. 14.

CENT.

[s] See B. Christ. Fred. Borner, Diff. de Colloquio Lutheri cum Caietano, Leips. 1722, in 4to.—Val. Ern. Loscheri Alla et Documenta Reformat. tom. ii. cap. xi. p. 435. op. Lutberi, tom. xxiv. p. 409.

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1.

his power of delivering from all the punishments due to sin and transgression. As soon as Luther received information of this inconsiderate and violent measure, he perceived, plainly, that it would be impossible for him to bring the court of Rome to any reasonable terms; he therefore repaired to Wittenberg, and, on the 28th of November, appealed from the pontiff to a general council.

The transactions of Miltitz.

All the projects of reconciliation disconcerted in 1519.

VIII. In the mean time the pope became sensible of his imprudence in entrusting Caietan with fuch a commission, and therefore resolved to employ a man of more candour and impartiality, and better acquainted with business, in order to suppress the rebellion of Luther, and to engage that reformer to submission and obedience. new legate was Charles Miltitz, a Saxon knight, who belonged to the court of Leo, and whose laic character exposed him less to the prejudices that arise from a spirit of party, than if he had been clothed with the splendid purple, or the monastic frock. He was also a person of great prudence, penetration, and dexterity, and every way qualified for the execution of fuch a nice and critical commission as this was. Leo sent him into Saxony to present to Frederic the golden consecrated rose (which the pontiffs are accustomed to bestow, as a peculiar mark of distinction, on those princes for whom they have, or think proper to profess, an uncommon friendship and esteem), and to treat with Luther, not only about finishing his controversy with Tetzel, but also with regard to the methods of bringing about a reconciliation between him and the court of Rome. Nor, indeed, were the negotiations of this prudent minister entirely unsuccessful; for, in his first conference with Luther, at Altenburg, in the year 1519, he carried matters so far as to persuade him to write a suba submissive letter to Leo, promising to observe a profound filence upon the matters in debate, provided that the same obligation should be imposed upon his adversaries. This same year, in the month of October, Miltitz had a fecond conference with Luther in the castle of Liebenwerd, and a third the year following, at Lichtenberg [t]. These meetings, which were reciprocally conducted with moderation and decency, gave great hopes of an approaching reconciliation; nor were these hopes altogether ill-founded [u]. But the violent proceedings of the enemies of Luther, and the arrogant spirit, as well as unaccountable imprudence, of the court of Rome, blasted these fair expectations, and rekindled the flames of discord.

CENT.

[w] IX. It was fufficient barely to mention The nature the measures taken by Caietan to draw Luther of the conferences anew under the papal yoke; because these mea-between sures were, indeed, nothing more than the wild Luther. suggestions of superstition and tyranny, maintained and avowed with the most shameless impudence. A man, who began by commanding the reformer to renounce his errors, and to believe, upon the dictates of mere authority, that "one drop of Christ's blood being sufficient to redeem the whole

<sup>[1]</sup> See Borneri Differt. The records relating to the embesty of Miltitz, were first published by Cyprianus, in Addit. ad Tenzelii Histor. Reformat. tom. i. ii.—As salso by Loscherus, in his Alla Reformat. tom. ii. c. xvi. and tom. iii. cap. ii.

[u] In the year 1519, Leo wrote to Luther in the suffest and most pacific terms. From this remarkable letter, (which was published in 1742, by Loscherus, in a German work entitled Unschuld Nachricht) it appears that at the court of Rome they looked upon a reconciliation between Luther and the pontiff as certain and near at hand.

[w] This whole ninth section is added to Dr. Mosheim's work by the translator, who thought that this part of Luther's history deserved to be related in a more circumstantial manner, than it is in the original.

CENT. XVL human race, the remaining quantity, which was shed in the garden and on the cross, was left as a legacy to the church, to be a treature whence indulgences were to be drawn and administered by the Roman pontiffs [x];" fuch a man was not to be reasoned with. But Militiz proceeded in quite another manner, and his conferences with the Saxon reformer are worthy of attention. ordered, indeed, to demand of the elector, that he would either oblige Luther to renounce the doctrines he had hitherto maintained, or that he would withdraw from him his protection and favour. But, perceiving that he was received by the elector with a degree of coldness that bordered upon contempt, and that Luther's credit and cause were too far advanced to be destroyed by the efforts of mere authority, he had recourse to gentler methods. He loaded Tetzel with the bitterest reproaches, on account of the irregular and superstitious means he had employed for promoting the sale of indulgences, and attributed to this miferable wretch all the abuses that Luther had complained of. Tetzel, on the other hand, burthened with the iniquities of Rome, tormented with a consciousness of his own injustice and extortions, stung with the opprobrious centures of the new legate, and feeing himself equally despised and abhorred by both parties, died of grief and despair [y]. This incendiary being sacrificed 28 a victim to cover the Roman pontiti from reproach,

[x] Such, among others still more absurd, were the expressions of Caietan, which he borrowed from one of the Decretals of Clement VI. called (and that justly for more than one reason) Extravagants.

<sup>[7]</sup> Luther was so affected by the agonies of despair under which Tetzel laboured, that he wrote to him a pathetic letter of consolation, which, however, produced no effect, His infamy was perpetuated by a picture placed in the church of Pirna, in which he is represented sitting on an ass and selling indulgences.

proach, Militz entered into a particular conver- CENT. fation with Luther at Altenburg, and, without XVI. pretending to justify the scandalous traffic in question, required only, that he would acknowledge the four following points: " 1st, That the " people had been seduced by false notions of "indulgences: 2dly, That he (Luther) had been the cause of that seduction, by representing indulgences as much more heinous than they really were: 3dly, That the odious con-" duct of Tetzel alone had given occasion to "these representations: and, 4thly, That, though " the avarice of Albert, archbishop of Mentz, had set on Tetzel, this rapacious tax-gatherer had far exceeded the bounds of his commis-"fion." These proposals were accompanied with many foothing words, with pompous encomiums on Luther's character, capacity, and talents, and with the softest and most pathetic expostulations in favour of union and concord in an afflicted and divided church; all which Miltitz joined together with the greatest dexterity and address, in order to touch and disarm the Saxon reformer. Nor were his mild and infinuating methods of negotiating without effect; and it was upon this occasion that Luther made submissions which shewed that his views were not, as yet, very extensive, his former prejudices entirely expelled, or his reforming principles steadily fixed. For he not only offered to observe a profound silence for the future with respect to indulgences, provided the same condition should be imposed on his adversaries; he went much farther; he proposed writing an humble and submissive letter to the pope, acknowledging that he had carried his zeal and animosity too far; and such a letter he wrote soon after the conference at Altenburg [z].

[2] This letter was dated the 13th of March, 1519, about two months after that conference.

CENT. He even consented to publish a circular letter, XVI. exhorting all his disciples and followers to reverence and obey the dictates of the holy Roman church. He declared that his only intention, in the writings he had composed, was to brand with infamy those emissaries who abused its authority, and employed its protection as a mask to cover their abominable and impious frauds. It is true, indeed, that amidst those weak submissions which the impartial demands of historical truth oblige us to relate, there was, properly speaking, no retraction of his former tenets, nor the smallest degree of respect shewn to the infamous traffic of indulgences. Nevertheless, the pretended majesty of the Roman church, and the authority of the Roman pontiff, were treated by Luther in this transaction, and in his letter to Leo, in a manner that could not naturally have been expected from a man who had already appealed from the pope to a general council.

Had the pope been so prudent as to accept the submission of Luther, he would have almost nipped in the bud the cause of the reformation, or would, at least, have considerably retarded its growth and progress. When he had gained over the head, the members would, with greater facility, have been reduced to obedience. But the flaming and excessive zeal of some inconsiderate bigots renewed (happily for the truth) the divisions, which were so near being healed, and, by animating both Luther and his followers to inspect more closely the enormities that prevailed in the papal hierarchy, promoted the principles, and augmented the spirit, which ultimately produced the blessed [a] reformation.

X. One

[a] See, for an ample account of Luther's conferences with Miltitz, the incomparable work of Seckendorff, intitled, Commentar. Hiftor. Apologet. de Lutheranismo, sive de Reformatione

X. One of the circumstances that contributed principally, at least by its consequences, to render the embassy of Miltitz, inessectual for the restoration of peace, was a famous controversy of an The disputes incidental nature that was carried on at Leipsic, in 1519, befor some weeks successively, in the year 1519[b]. Eckius, the celebrated theologian, happened to Callottedt. differ widely from Carlostadt, the colleague and companion of Luther, in his fentiments concerning Free-Will. The result of this variety in opinion was easy to be foreseen. The military genius of our ancestors had so far infected the schools of learning, that differences in points of religion and literature, when they grew to a certain degree of warmth and animofity, were decided, like the quarrels of valiant knights, by a single combat. Some famous university was pitched upon as the field of battle, while the rector and professors beheld the contest, and proclaimed the victory. Eckius, therefore, in compliance with the spirit of this fighting age, challenged Carlostadt, and even Luther himself, against whom he had already drawn his pen, to try the force of his theological arms. The challenge was accepted, the day appointed, and the three champions appeared in the field. The first conflict was between Carlo-formatione Religionis, &c. in which the facts relating to Luther and the Reformation are deduced from the most valuable and authentic manuscripts and records, contained in the library of Saxe-Gotha, and in other learned and princely collections; and in which the frauds and falsehoods of Maimbourg's History of Lutberanism are fully detected and refuted .- As to Miltitz, his fate was unhappy. His moderation (which nothing but the blind zeal of some furious monks could have prevented from being eminently serviceable to the cause of Rome) was represented by Eckius, as something worse than indifference about the success of his commission; and, after several marks of neglect received from the pontiff, he had the misfortune to lese his life in passing the Rhine at Mentz.

CENT. SECT. I. at Leipfic, tween Ec-

[b] These disputes commenced on the 27th of June, and ended on the 15th of July.

stadt

CENT. XVI.

stadt and Eckius, respecting the powers and freedom of the human will [c]; it was carried on in the castle of Pleissenburg, before a numerous and fplendid auditory, and was followed by a dispute between Luther and Eckius concerning the authority and supremacy of the Roman pontiff. This latter controversy, which the present situation of affairs rendered fingularly nice and critical, was left undecided. Hoffman, at that time rector of the university of Leipsic, and who had been also appointed judge of the arguments alleged on both fides, refused to declare to whom the victory belonged; so that the decision of this matter was referred to the universities of Paris and Erfort  $\lceil d \rceil$ . In the mean time, one of the immediate effects of this dispute was a visible increase of the bitterness and enmity which Eckius had conceived against Luther; for from this very period he breathed nothing but fury against the Saxon reformer [e],

[c] This controversy turned upon liberty, considered not in a philosophical, but in a theological sense. It was rather a dispute concerning power than concerning liberty. Carlossadt maintained, that, since the fall of man, our natural liberty is not strong enough to conduct us to what is good, without the intervention of divine grace. Eckius afferted, on the contrary, that our natural liberty co-operated with divine grace, and that it was in the power of man to consent to the divine impulse, or to resist it. The former attributed all to God; the latter divided the merit of virtue between God and the creature. The modern Lutherans have almost universally abandoned the sentiments of Carlossadt.

[d] There is an ample account of this dispute at Leipsic, given by Loscherus, in his Alla et Documenta Resormationis,

tom. iii. c. vii. p. 203.

This was one proof that the issue of the controversy was not in his favour. The victor, in any combat, is generally too full of satisfaction and self-complacency, to feel the emotions of sury and vengeance, which seldom arise but from disappointment and defeat. There is even an insolent kind of clemency that arises from an eminent and palpable superiority. This indeed Eckius had no opportunity of exercising. Luther demonstrated, in this conference, that the church of Rome, in whom he marked out as a victim to his vengeance, without confidering, that the measures he took for the destruction of Luther, must have a most pernicious influence upon the cause of the Roman pontist, by somenting the present divisions, and thus contributing to the progress of the reformation, as was really the case [e].

CENT. XVI. SECT. I.

XI: Among the spectators of this ecclesiastical Philip Mecombat, was Philip Melancthon, at that time professor of Greek at Wittenberg, who had not, as yet, been involved in these divisions, (for the mildness of his temper, and his elegant taste for polite literature, rendered him averse from disputes of this nature,) though he was the intimate friend of Luther, and approved his design of delivering the pure and primitive science of theology from the darkness and subtilty of scholastic jargon [f]. As this eminent man was one of those whom this dispute with Eckius convinced of the excellence the earlier ages, had never been acknowledged as superior to other churches; and he combated the pretensions of that church and its bishop, from the testimony of scripture, the authority of the fathers, and the best ecclesiastical historians, and even from the decrees of the council of Nice: while all the arguments of Eckius were derived from the spurious and insipid Decretals, which were scarcely of 400 years standing. See Seckendors? History of Lutberanism.

of Luther's cause; as he was, moreover, one of tack upon the store-house of indulgences, Eckius was his intimate friend. Eckius must certainly have been uncommonly unworthy, since even the mild and gentle Melancthon represents him as an inhuman persecutor, a sophist, and a knave, who maintained doctrines contrary to his belief, and against his conscience. See the learned Dr. Jortin's Life of Erasmus, vol. ii. p. 713; see also Vitus's account of the death of Eckius in Seckendors, lib. iii. p. 468; and in the Scholia ad Indicem, I Hist. of the same book, No. xxii.

[f] See Melancthon's letter concerning the conference at Leipsic, in Loscherus' Alla et Documenta Reformationis, tom. iil. cap. viii. p. 215; as also in the Wittenberg edition of Luther's works, vol. i. p. 336.

the

CENT. the illustrious and respectable instruments of the Reformation; it may not be improper to give some account of the talents and virtues that rendered his name immortal. His greatest enemies have borne testimony to his merit. They have been forced to acknowledge, that the annals of antiquity exhibit very few worthies that may be compared with him; whether we consider the extent of his knowledge in things human and divine, the fertility and elegance of his genius, the facility and quickness of his comprehension, or the uninterrupted industry that attended his learned and theological labours. He rendered to philosophy and the liberal arts the same eminent service that Luther had done to religion, by purging them from the dross with which they had been corrupted, and by recommending them, in a powerful and persuasive manner, to the study of the Germans. He had the rare talent of discerning truth in its most intricate connections and combinations, of comprehending at once the most abstract notions, and expressing them with the utmost ease and perspicuity. And he applied this happy talent in religious disquisitions with such unparalleled success, that it may safely be affirmed, that the cause of true Christianity derived from the learning and genius of Melancthon more fignal advantages, and a more effectual support, than it received from any of the other doctors of the age. His love of peace and concord, which partly arose from the sweetness of his natural temper, made him desire with ardour that a reformation might be effected without producing a schism in the church, and that the external communion of the contending parties might be preserved uninterrupted and entire. This spirit of mildness and charity, carried perhaps too far, led him sometimes to make concessions that were neither consistent with prudence, nor advantageous to the cause in which he was engaged. It is however ever certain, that he gave no quarter to those more dangerous and momentous errors that reigned in the church of Rome; but maintained on the contrary that their extirpation was essentially necessary, in order to the restoration of true religion. the natural complexion of this great man there was fomething foft, timid, and yielding. Hence originated a certain diffidence of himself, that not only made him examine things with the greatest attention and care, before he resolved upon any measure, but also filled him with uneasy apprehensions where there was no danger, and made him fear even things that, in reality, could never happen. And yet, on the other hand, when the · hour of real danger approached, when things bore a formidable aspect, and the cause of religion was in imminent peril, then this timorous man was at once converted into an intrepid hero, looked danger in the face with unshaken constancy, and opposed his adversaries with invincible fortitude. All this shews, that the force of truth and the power of principle had diminished the weaknesses and defects of Melancthon's natural character, without entirely removing them. Had his forti-, tude been more uniform and steady, his desire of reconciling all interests and pleasing all parties less vehement and excessive, his triumph over the superstitions imbibed in his infancy more complete [g], be must deservedly have been considered as one of the greatest among men  $\lceil b \rceil$ .

CENT.

XII. While

[g] By this, no doubt, Dr. Mosheim means the credality this great man discovered with respect to prodigies and dreams, and his having been somewhat addicted to the pretended science of astrology. See Schelhornii Amenit. Hist. Eccles. et Lit. vol. ii. p. 609.

[b] We have a life of Melancthon, written by Joachim Camerarius, which has gone through several editions. But a more accurate account of this illustrious reformer, composed

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. 1.
The origin of the reformation in Switzerland

XII. While the credit and authority of the Roman pontiff were thus upon the decline in Germany, they received a mortal wound in Switzerland from Ulric Zuingle, a canon of Zurich, whose extensive learning and uncommon fagacity were accompanied with the most heroic intrepidity and resolution [i]. It must even be acknowledged [k], that this eminent man had perceived some rays of the truth before Luther came to an open rupture with the church of

by a prudent, impartial, and well-informed biographer, as also a complete collection of his works, would be an inestimable present to the republic of letters.

the quality of beroic intrepidity, because it was a predominant and remarkable part of the character of this illustrious reformer, whose learning and fortitude, tempered by the greatest moderation, rendered him, perhaps beyond comparison, the brightest ornament of the protestant cause.

[k] Our learned historian does not seem to acknowledge this with pleasure, as the Germans and Swiss contend for the honour of having given the first overtures towards the reforma-If, however, truth has obliged him to make this acknowledgment, he has accompanied it with some modifications that are more artful than accurate. He says, "that Zuingle had perceived some rays of the truth before Luther came to an open rupture," &c. to make us imagine that Luther might have seen the truth long before that rupture happened, and consequently as soon as Zuingle. But it is well known, that the latter, from his early years, had been shocked at several of the superstitious practices of the church of Rome; that so early as the year 1516*, he had begun to explain the scriptures to the people, and to censure, though with great prudence and moderation, the errors of a corrupt church; and that he had very noble and extensive ideas of a general reformation, at the very time that Luther retained almost the whole fystem of popery, indulgences excepted. Luther proceeded very flowly to exempt himself from those prejudices of education, which Zuingle, by the force of an adventurous genius, and an uncommon degree of knowledge and penetration, eafily shook off.

Ruchart, Hist. de la Reformation en Suisse. Zuinglii op. tom. i. p. 7. Nouveau Diction. vol. iv. p. 866. Durand, Hist. du xvi. Siecle, tom. ii. p. 8. 249. Juriou, Apologie pour les Reformateurs, &c. partie I. p. 119.

Rome. He was, however, afterwards still farther CENT. animated by the example, and instructed by the XVI. writings of the Saxon reformer; and thus his zeal for the good cause acquired new strength and vigour. For he not only explained the facred writings in his public discourses to the people [1], but also gave, in the year 1519, a signal proof of his courage, by opposing, with the greatest resolution and success, the ministry of a certain Italian monk, named Bernardine Samson, who was carrying on, in Switzerland, the impious traffic of indulgences with the same impudence that Tetzel had done in Germany [m]. This was the first remarkable event that prepared the way for the reformation among the Helvetic cantons. In process of time, Zuingle pursued with steadiness and resolution the design that he had begun with fuch courage and fuccess. His noble efforts were seconded by some other learned men, educated in Germany, who became his colleagues and the companions of his labours, and who, jointly with him, succeeded so far in removing the credulity ef a deluded people, that the pope's supremacy was rejected and denied in the greatest part of Switzerland. It is indeed to be observed, that Zuingle did not always use the same methods of converfion that were employed by Luther; nor, upon par-ceding note, and from the most authentic records, that Zuingle had explained the scriptures to the people, and called in question the authority and supremacy of the pope, before the name of Luther was known in Switzerland. Besides, instead of receiving instruction from the German reformer, he was much his superior in learning, capacity, and judgment, and was much sitter to be his master than his disciple, as the four volumes in solio which we have of his works abundantly testify.

[m] See Jo. Henr. Hottingeri Hist. Eccles. Helvet. tom. ii. lib. vi. p. 28.—Ruchat, Histoire de la Resormation en Suisse, tome i. liv. i. p. 4—66.—Gerdes, Histor. Renovati Evange-lii, tom. ii. p. 228.

VOL. IV.

ticular

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1. ticular occasions, did he discountenance the use of violent measures against such as adhered with obstinacy to the superstitions of their ancestors. He is also said to have attributed, to the civil magistrate, such an extensive power in ecclesiastical affairs, as is quite inconsistent with the essence and genius of religion. But, upon the whole, even envy itself must acknowledge, that his intentions were upright, and his designs worthy of high approbation.

Luther is excommunicated by the pope in 1,320.

XIII. In the mean time, the religious diffensions in Germany increased, instead of diminishing. For while Miltitz was treating with Luther in Saxony, in such a mild and prudent manner as offered the fairest prospect of an approaching accommodation, Eckius, inflamed with refentment and fury on account of his defeat at Leipsic, repaired with the utmost precipitation to Rome, to accomplish, as he imagined, the ruin of Luther. There, entering into a league with the Dominicans, who were still in high credit at the papal court, and more especially with their two zealous patrons, De Priero and Caietan, he earnestly entreated Leo to level the thunder of his anathemas at the head of Luther, and to exclude him from the communion of the church. The Dominicans, desirous of revenging the affront which, in their opinion, their whole order had received by Luther's treatment of their brother Tetzel and their patron Caietan, seconded the furious efforts of Eckius against the Saxon reformer, and used their utmost endeavours to have his request granted. The pontiff, overcome by the importunity of these pernicious counsellors, imprudently issued [n] a bull against Luther, dated the 15th of June, 1520, in

[n] The wifest and best part of the Roman catholics acknowledge, that Leo was chargeable with the most culpable imprudence in this rash and violent method of proceeding. See

in which forty-one pretended heresies, ex-tracted from his writings, were solemnly condemned, his works ordered to be publicly burned, and in which he was again summoned, on pain of excommunication, to confess and retract his pretended errors within the space of sixty days, and to throw himself upon the clemency and mercy of the pontiff.

XIV. As soon as the account of this rash Luther withsentence was brought to Luther, he thought felf from the it was high time to consult both his present communion defence and his future security; and the first of Rome. step he took for this purpose, was the renewal of his appeal from the sentence of the pontiff, to the more respectable decision of a general council. But as he forefaw that this appeal would be treated with contempt at the court of Rome, and that, when the time prescribed for his recantation should have elapsed, the thunder of excommunication would be leveled at his devoted head, he judged it prudent to withdraw himself voluntarily from the communion of the church of Rome, before he was obliged to leave it by force; and thus to render this new bull of ejection a blow in the air, an exercise of authority without any object to act upon. At the same time, he resolved to execute this wise determination in a public manner, that his voluntary retreat from the communion of a corrupt and fu-

See a Differtation of the learned John Frederick Mayer, de Pentificiis Leonis X. processum adversus Lutherum improbantibus, which is part of a work published at Hamburg, in 4to, in the year 1698, under this singular title: Ecclesia Romana Reformationis Lutherane patrona et cliens. There were several wife and thinking persons at this time about the Roman pontiff, who declared openly, without the least ceremony, their difapprobation of the violent counsels of Eckius and the Dominicans; and gave it as their opinion, that it was both prudent and just to wait for the issue of the conferences of Miltitz with Luther, before such forcible measures should be employed.

perstitious

perdinons church might re miverfally known, hunder. With this new, on the 10th of December, in the year 1525, he had a pile of wood rected without the walls of the city of; and there, in prefence if a procligious multitude of people of all ranks and priess, he committed to the flames both the out that had been published against him, and the decretals and canons relating to the pope's supreme unification. By this he declared to the world, that he was no longer a subject of the Roman pontiff: md that, confequently, the sentence of excommunication against him, which was daily expected from Rome, was entirely superfluous and infignificant. For the man who publich commits to the dames the code that contains the laws of his lovereign, thews thereby that he has no longer any respect for his government, nor any design to submit to his authority; and the man who voluntarily withdraws himself from any fociety, cannot, with any appearance of reason or common lende, be afterwards forcibly and authoritatively excluded from it. It is not improbable, that Luther was directed, in this critical measure, by perions well tkilled in the law, who are generally dexterous in furnithing a perplexed client with nice diffinctions and plaufible evafions. Be that as it may, is separated himself only from the church of Rome, which confiders the pope as infallible, and not from the church confidered in a more extensive sense; for he submitted to the decision of the universal church, when that decision should be given in a general council lawfully affembled. When this judicious diffinction is considered, it will not appear at all surprising, that many, even of the Roman catholics, who weighed matters with a certain degree of impartiality and wildom, and were zealous for the maintenance of the liberties of Germany, justified this bold resolution of Luther [0]. In less than a month after this noble and important step had been taken by the Saxon reformer, a second bull was issued against him, on the 6th of January, 1521, by which he was expelled from the communion of the church, for having insulted the majesty, and disowned the supremacy, of the Roman pontiff [p].

[o] Oi Wittenberg.

CENT.

XV. Such iniquitous laws, enacted against the Therife of person and doctrine of Luther, produced an the Luthereffect different from what was expected by the imperious pontiff. Instead of intimidating this bold reformer, they led him to form the project of founding a church upon principles opposite to those of Rome, and to establish, in it, a system of doctrine and ecclesiastical discipline, agreeable to the spirit and precepts of the Gospel of truth. This, indeed, was the only resource left to him; for, to submit to the orders of a cruel and insolent enemy, would have been the greatest degree of imprudence imaginable; and to embrace, anew, errors that he had rejected with a just indignation, and exposed with the clearest evidence, would have discovered a want of integrity and principle, worthy only of the most abandoned profligate. From this time, there-

[p] Both these bulls are to be found in the Bullarium Romasum, and also in the learned Pfaff's Histor. Theol. Literar.

tom. ii. p. 42.

<sup>[0]</sup> This judicious distinction has not been sufficiently attended to; and the Romanists, some through artisice, others through ignorance, have confounded the papacy with the catholic church; though they be, in reality, two different things. The papacy indeed, by the ambitious dexterity of the Roman pontiffs, incorporated itself by degrees into the church; but it was a preposterous supplement, and was really as foreign to its genuine constitution, as a new citadel, erested by a successful usurper, would be to an ancient city. Luther set out and acted upon this distinction; he went out of the citadel, but he meant to remain in the city, and, like a good patriot, designed to reform its corrupted government.

CENT. XVI.

fore, he applied himself to the pursuit of the truth with increased assiduity and fervour; nor did he only review with attention, and confirm by new arguments, what he had hitherto taught, but went far beyond it, and made vigorous attacks upon the principal fortress of popery, the power and jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff, which he overturned from its very foundation. In this noble undertaking he was feconded by many learned and pious men, in various parts of Europe; by those professors of the university of Wittenberg, who had adopted his principles; and in a more especial manner by the celebrated Melancthon. And as the same of Luther's wisdom and Melancthon's learning had filled that academy with an incredible number of students, who slocked to it from all parts, this happy circumstance propagated the principles of the Reformation with an amazing rapidity through all the countries of Europe [q].

A diet affembled at Worms, in 1521. XVI. Not long after the commencement of these divisions, Maximilian I. had resigned his breath; and his grandson, Charles I. of Spain and V. of Austria, had succeeded him in the empire in the year 1519. Leo seized this new occasion of venting and executing his vengeance, by putting the new emperor in mind of his character as advocate and defender of the church, and demanding the exemplary punishment of Luther, who had rebelled against its sacred laws and institutions. On the other hand, Frederic the Wise employed his credit with Charles to prevent the publication of any unjust edict against this reformer, and to have his cause tried by the canons of the Germanic church, and the laws of the empire. This request was so much the more likely to be granted, as Charles CENT. was under much greater obligations to Frederic XVI.

[q] There is a particular account of the rapid progress of the reformation in Germany given by the learned Daniel Gerdes, professor at Groningen, in his Historia renovati Evangelii, tom, ii.

than to any other of the German princes; for it was chiefly by his zealous and important services that he had been raised to the empire, in opposition to the pretensions of such a formidable rival as Francis I. king of France. The emperor was fensible of his obligations to the worthy elector, and was disposed to satisfy his demands. That, however, he might do this without displeafing the Roman pontiss, he resolved that Luther should be called before the council which was to be affembled at Worms in the year 1521, and that his cause should be there publicly heard, before any definitive sentence should be pronounced against him. It may perhaps appear strange, and even inconsistent with the laws of the church, that a cause of a religious nature should be examined and decided in the public diet. But it must be considered, that these diets, in which the archbishops, bishops, and even certain abbots, had their places, as well as the princes of the empire, were not only political assemblies, but also provincial councils for Germany, to whose jurisdiction, by the ancient canon law, such causes as that of Luther properly belonged.

XVII. Luther, therefore, appeared at Worms, The refult of secured against the violence of his enemies by this diet was Luther's a safe-conduct from the emperor, and, on banishment. the 17th of April, pleaded his cause before that grand affembly with the utmost resolution and presence of mind. Menaces and entreaties were alternately employed to conquer the firmness of his purpose, to engage him to renounce the propositions he had hitherto maintained, and to bend him to a submission to the Roman pontiff. But he opposed all these attempts with a noble obstinacy, and peremptorily declared that he would never abandon his opinions, or change his

E 4

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1. his conduct, unless he should be convinced, by the word of God, or the dictates of right reason, that his opinions were erroneous, and his conduct unlawful. When therefore neither promises nor threats could shake the constancy of this magnanimous reformer, he obtained, indeed, from the emperor, the liberty of returning unmolested to his home: but, after his departure from the diet, he was condemned by the unanimous suffrages both of the emperor and the princes, and was declared an enemy to the holy Roman empire [r]. Frederic, who saw the storm rising against Luther,

[r] This fentence, which was dated the 8th of May, 1521, was excessively severe; and Charles, whether through fincere zeal or political cunning, shewed himself in this affair an ardent abettor of the papal authority. For in this edict the pope is declared the only true judge of the controversy, in which he was evidently a party concerned; Luther is declared a member cut off from the church, a schismatic, a notorious and objinate feretic; the severest punishments are denounced against those, who shall receive, entertain, maintain, or countenance him, either by acts of hospitality, by conversation or writing; and all his disciples, ad ierents, and sollowers, are involved in the same condemnation. This edia was, however, received with the highest disapprobation by all wife and thinking persons, 1st because Luther had been condemned without being heard, at Rome, by the college of cardinals, and afterwards at Worms, where, without any discussion or refutation of his doctrine, he was only despotically ordered to abandon and renounce it; 2dly, because Charles V. as emperor, had not a right to give an authoritative sentence against the doctrine of Luther, or to take for granted the infallibility of the Roman pontiss, before these matters were discussed and decided by a general council; and, 3dly, because a considerable number of the German princes, who were immediately interested in this affair, such as the electors of Cologne, Saxony, and the Palatinat, and other sovereign princes, had neither been present at the diet, nor examined and approved the edia; and, therefore, at best, it could only have force in the territories belonging to the house of Augria, and to such of the princes as had given their consent to its publication. But after all, the edict of Worms produced scarcely any effect, not only for the reasons now mentioned, but also because Charles, whose presence, authority, and zeal, were necessary to render ther, used the best precautions to secure him from its violence. For this purpose he sent three or four persons in whom he could confide, to — meet him on his return from the diet, in order to conduct him to a place of safety. These emisfaries, disguised by masks, executed their commission with the utmost secrecy and success. Meeting with Luther, near Eisenach, they seized him, and carried him into the castle of Wartenberg; nor, as some have imagined upon probable grounds, was this done without the knowledge of his Imperial majesty. In this retreat, which he called his Patmos, the Saxon reformer lay concealed for ten months, and employed this involuntary leifure in compositions that were afterwards very useful to the world [s].

CENT.

SECT. I.

XVIII. The

it respectable, was involved in other affairs of a civil nature which he had more at heart. Obliged to pass successively into Flanders, England, and Spain, to quell the seditions of his subjects, and to form new alliances against his great enemy and rival Francis, he lost sight of the edict of Worms, while all who had any regard to the liberties of the empire and the rights of the Germanic church treated this edict with the highest indignation, or the utmost contempt.

This precaution of the humane and excellent elector being put in execution the 3d of May, five days before the folemn publication of the edict of Worms, the pope missed his blow; and the adversaries of Luther became doubly odious to the people in Germany, who, unacquainted with the scheme of Frederic, and not knowing what was become of their favourite reformer, imagined that he was imprisoned, or perhaps destroyed, by the emissaries of Rome. In the mean time, Luther lived in peace and quiet in the castle of Wartenberg, where he translated a great part of the New Testament into the German language, and wrote frequent letters to his trusty friends and intimates to comfort them under his absence. Nor was his confinement here inconsistent with amusement and relaxation; for he frequently enjoyed the pleasure of hunting in company with his keepers, passing for a country gentleman, under the name of Tounker George.

If we cast an eye upon the conduct of Luther, in this first scene of his trials, we shall find a true spirit of rational zeal CENT.
XVI.
SECT. 1.
The conduct of Luther after his leaving the cafile of Wartenberg.

XVIII. The active spirit of Luther could not, however, long bear this consinement; he therefore lest his Patmos in the month of March, 1522, without the consent or even the knowledge of his patron and protector Frederic, and repaired to Wittenberg. One of the principal motives that engaged him to take this bold step, was the information he had received of the inconsiderate conduct of Carlostadt, and some other friends of the Reformation, who had already zeal, generous probity, and Christian fortitude, animating this reformer. In his behaviour, before and at the diet of Worms. we observe these qualities shine with a peculiar lustre, and tempered, notwithstanding Luther's warm complexion, with an unexpected degree of moderation and decent respect both for his civil and ecclesiastical superiors. When some of his friends, informed of the violent defigns of the Roman court, and alarmed by the bull that had been published against him by the rash pontiff, advised him not to expose his person at the diet of Worms, notwithstanding the imperial safe-conduct (which, in a similar case, had not been sufficient to protect John Huss and Jerome of Prague from the perfidy and cruelty of their enemies), he answered with his usual intrepidity, that "were he obliged to encounter at Worms as many devils as there were tiles upon the houses of that city, this would not deter him from his fixed purpose of appearing there; that fear, in his case, could be only a luggestion of Satan, who apprehended the approaching ruin of his kingdom, and who was willing to avoid a public defeat before such a grand assembly as the diet of Worms." The fire and obstinacy that appeared in this answer seemed to prognosticate much warmth and vehemence in Luther's conduct at the assembly. But it was quite otherwise. He exposed with decency and dignity the superstitious doctrines and practices of the church of Rome, and the grievances that arose from the over-grown power of its pontisf, and the abuse that was made of it. He acknowledged the writings with which he was charged, and offered, both with moderation and humility, to defend their contents. He defired the pope's legates and their adherents to hear him, to inform him to reason with him; and solemnly offered, in presence of the affembled princes and bishops, to renounce his doctrines, if they were shewn to be erroneous. But to all these expostulations he received no other answer, than the despotic dictates of mere authority, attended with injurious and provoking language.

excited

excited tumults in Saxony, and were acting in a CENT. manner equally prejudicial to the tranquillity of XVI. the state, and the true interests of the church. Carlostadt, professor at Wittenberg, was a man of considerable learning, who had pierced the veil, with which papal artifice and superstition had covered the truth, and, at the instigation of Eckius, had been excluded with Luther from the communion of the church. His zeal, however, was intemperate; his plans were laid with temerity; and executed without moderation. During Luther's absence, he threw down and broke the images of the faints that were placed in the churches, and instead of restraining the vehemence of a fanatical multitude, who had already begun in some places to abuse the precious liberty that was dawning upon them, he encouraged their ill-timed violence, and led them on to sedition and mutiny. Luther opposed the impetuosity of this imprudent reformer with the utmost fortitude and dignity, and wifely exhorted him and his adherents to eradicate error from the minds of the people, before they made war upon its external enfigns in the churches and public places; fince, the former being once removed, the latter must fall of course [t], and since the destruction more advantageous to Luther than the rigorous demands of historical impartiality will admit: at least the defects of the great reformer are here shaded with art. It is evident from several passages in the writings of Luther, that he was by no means averse to the use of images, but that, on the contrary, he looked upon them as adapted to excite and animate the devotion of the people. But, perhaps, the true reason of Luther's displeasure at the proceedings of Carlostadt, was, that he could not bear to see another crowned with the glory of executing a plan which he had formed, and that he was ambitious of appearing the principal, if not the only, conductor of this great work. This is not a mere conjecture. Luther himself has not taken the least pains to conceal this instance of his ambition:

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1.

of the latter alone could be attended with no lasting fruits. To these prudent admonitions this excellent reformer added the influence of example, by applying himself, with redoubled industry and zeal, to his German translation of the Holy Scriptures, which he carried on with expedition and fuccess [u], with the affistance of some learned and pious men whom he consulted in this important undertaking. The event abundantly shewed the wisdom of Luther's advice. For the different parts of this translation, being succesfively and gradually spread abroad among the people, produced sudden and almost incredible effects, and extirpated, root and branch, the erroneous principles and superstitious doctrines of the church of Rome from the minds of a prodigious number of persons.

Leo X. fueceeded by Adrian VI. in 1522. Diet of Nuremberg. XIX. During these transactions, Leo died, and was succeeded in the pontificate by Adrian VI. a native of Utrecht. This pope, who had formerly been preceptor to Charles V. and who owed his new dignity to the good offices of that prince, was a man of probity and candor, who acknowledged ingenuously that the church laboured under the most fatal difambition: and it appears evidently in several of his letters. On the other hand, it must be owned, that Carlostact was rash, violent, and prone to enthusiasm, as appears by the connexions he formed afterwards with the fanatical anabaptists, headed by Munzer. His contest with Luther about the eucharist, in which he manifestly maintained the truth, shall be mentioned in its proper place.

[u] Of this German translation of the Bible, which contributed more than all other causes, taken together, to strengthen the soundations of the Lutheran church, we have an interesting history composed by Jo. Fred. Mayer, and published in 4to at Hamburg, in the year 1701. A more ample one was expected from the labours of the learned J. Melchior Krast; but his death disappointed the hopes of the learned. See Jo. Alb. Fabricii Centifolium Lutheranum, par. I. p. 147. & par. II. p. 617.

orders,

orders, and declared his willingness to apply the CENT.
remedies that should be judged the most adapted to heal them [w]. He began his pontificate by sending a legate to the diet, which was assembled at Nuremberg in 1522. Francis Cheregato, the person who was intrusted with this commission, had positive orders to demand the speedy and vigorous execution of the sentence that had been pronounced against Luther and his followers at the diet of Worms; but, at the same time, he was authorised to declare that the pontiff was ready to remove the abuses and grievances that had armed such a formidable enemy against the see of Rome. The princes of the empire, encouraged on the one hand by this declaration, and, on the other, by the absence of the emperor, who at this time resided in Spain, seized this opportunity of proposing the convocation of a general council in Germany, in order to deliberate upon the proper methods of bringing about an universal reformation of the church. They exhibited, at the same time, a hundred articles, containing the heaviest complaints of the injurious treatment the Germans had hitherto received from the court of Rome, and, by a public law, prohibited all innovation in religious matters, until a general council should decide what was to be done in an affair of fuch high moment and importance [x]. As long as the German princes were unacquainted with, or inattentive to, the measures that were taken in Saxony for founding a new church in direct oppofition to that of Rome, they were zealously unanimous in their endeavours to fet bounds to the papal authority and jurisdiction, which they all looked fus Sedem Romanam, lib. ii. p. 327.

[x] See Jac. Fred. Georgii Gravamina Germanorum adver-

[w] See Caspar. Burmanni Adrianus VI. sive Anale Ea Historica de Adriano VI. Papa Romano, published at Utrecht in 4to, in the year 1727.

CENT. XVI. upon as overgrown and enormous: nor were they at all offended at Luther's contest with the Roman pontiss, which they considered as a dispute of a private and personal nature.

private and personal nature.

Clement VII. elected pope in 1523.

XX. The good pope Adrian did not long enjoy the pleasure of sitting at the head of the church. He died in the year 1523, and was fucceeded by Clement VII. a man of a reserved character, and prone to artifice [y]. This pontiff fent to the imperial diet at Nuremberg, in the year 1524, a cardinal legate, named Campeggio, whose orders, with respect to the affairs of Luther, breathed nothing but feverity and violence, and who inveighed against the lenity of the German princes in delaying the execution of the decree of Worms, while he carefully avoided the smallest mention of the promife Adrian had made to reform the corruptions of a superstitious church. The emperor feconded the demands of Campeggio, by the orders he fent to his minister to infift upon the execution of the decree of the diet of Worms against Luther and his adherents. The princes of the empire, tired out by these importunities and remonstrances, changed in appearance the law they had passed, but confirmed it in reality. For while they promised to observe, as far as was possible, the edict of Worms, they renewed their demand of a general council, and left all other disputed points to be examined and decided at the diet that was foon to be affembled at Spire. The pope's legate, on the other hand, perceiving by these proceedings, that the German princes in general were no enemies to the Reformation, retired to Ratisbon, with the bishops and those princes who adhered to the cause of Rome, and there drew from them a new decla- CENT. ration, by which they engaged themselves to execute rigorously the edict of Worms in their respective dominions.

<sup>[7]</sup> See Jac. Zeigleri Historia Clementis VII. in Jo. Georgii Schelhornii Amanitates Histor. Eccles. tom. ii. p. 210.

XXI. While the efforts of Luther towards Carloftadt the reformation of the church were crowned and Zuingle. with growing fuccess, and almost all the nations seemed disposed to open their eyes upon the light, two unhappy occurrences, one of a foreign, and the other of a domestic nature, contributed greatly to retard the progress of this salutary and glorious work. The domestic, or internal incident, was a controverfy concerning the manner in which the body and blood of Christ were present in the eucharist, that arose among those whom the pope had publicly excluded from the communion of the church, and unhappily produced among the friends of the good cause the most deplorable animolities and divisions. Luther and his followers, though they had rejected the monstrous doctrine of the church of Rome with respect to transubstantiation, or the change of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, were nevertheless of opinion, that the partakers of the Lord's supper received, with the bread and wine, the real body and blood of Christ. This, in their judgment, was a mystery, which they did not pretend to explain [z]. Carlostadt, who was Luther's colleague, understood the matter otherwise; and his doctrine, which was afterwards illustrated and confirmed by Zinge with much more ingeneity than is its provided in anotheris to this: "That " the war with the Chit were not really " and the test is that that external figns, " ... in the minds " : Chimize in mentione of the suf-" feries and desit of the tive Saviour, and " of the benefits which wile from h [a]." This opinion was embraced by all the friends of the Reformation in Salarataria and by a confidera-Lie number ci its votaties in Germany. other hard. Luther maintained his doctrine, in relation to this point, with the utmost obstinacy; and hence arose, in the year 1524, a tedious and vehement controveriv, which, notwithstanding the zealous endeavours that were used to reconcile the contending parties, terminated, at length, in a mitchievous division between those who had embarked together in the facred cause of religion and liberty.

<sup>[2]</sup> Luther was not so modest as Dr. Mosheim here represents him. He pretended to explain his doctrine of the real presence, absurd and contradictory as it was, and uttered much lenseless jargon on this subject. As in a red-hot iron, said he, two diffinct substances, viz. iron and fire, are united, so is the body of Christ joined with the bread in the eucharist. tion this miserable comparison to shew into what absurdities the towering pride of system will often betray men of deep sense and true genius.

72:

The war it is in the contract of the contract

XXII. To these intestine divisions were added the horrors of a civil war, which was the satal efsect of appression on the one hand, and of enthusiasm on the other, and, by its unhappy consequences, proved prejudicial to the cause and progress of the Reformation. In the year 1525, a prodigious multitude of seditious fanatics suddenly arose, like a whirlwind, in different parts of Germany, took arms, united their forces, waged war against

[a] See Val. Ern. Loscheri Historia motuum inter Lutberanos et Reformatos, part I. lib. ii. cap. i. p. 55.—See also, on the other side of the question, Scultet's Annales Evangelii, published by Von-der Hardt, in his Historia Liter. Reformat. p. 74—Rud. Hospinianus, and other reformed writers, who have treated of the origin and progress of this dispute.— The pears from this representation (which is a just one) of the sentiments of Zuingle concerning the holy sacrament of the Lord's supper, that they were the same with those maintained by bishop Hoadly, in his "Plain Account of the Nature and Design of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper."

against the laws, the magistrates, and the empire in general, ravaged the country with fire and fword, and exhibited daily the most horrid spectacles of unrelenting barbarity. The greatest part of this furious and formidable mob was composed of peasants and vassals, who groaned under heavy burthens, and declared they were no longer able to bear the despotic severity of their chiefs; and hence this fedition was called the Ruftic war, or the war of the peafants [b]. But it is also certain, that this motley crowd was intermixed with numbers, who joined in this sedition from different motives, some being impelled by the suggestions of enthusiasm, and others by the profligate and odious view of rapine and plunder, of repairing fortunes ruined by extravagant and dissolute living. At the first breaking-out of this war, it seemed to have been kindled only by civil and political views; and agreeable to this is the general tenor of the Declarations and Manifestoes that were published by these rioters. The claims they made in these papers related to nothing farther than the diminution of the talks imposed upon the peasants, and to their obtaining a greater measure of liberty than they had hitherto enjoyed. Religion seemed to be out of the question; at least, it was not the object of deliberation or debate. But no fooner had the enthusiast Munzer [c] put himself at the head of this

[c] Or Munster, as some call him.

[b] These kinds of wars or commotions, arising from the impatience of the peasants, under the heavy burthens that were imposed on them, were very common long before the time of Luther Hence the author of the Danish Chronicle (published by the learned Ludewig, in the ninth volume of his Relig. MStorum, p. 59.) calls these insurrections a common evil. This will not appear surprising to such as consider, that, is most places, the condition of the peasants was much more intolerable and grievous before the reformation, than it is in our times; and that the tyranny and cruelty of the nobility, before that happy period, were excessive and insupportable.

CENT. XVI. SECT. I.

this outrageous rabble, than the face of things changed entirely, and by the instigation of this man, who had deceived numbers before this time by his pretended visions and inspirations, the civil commotions in Saxony and Thuringia were foon directed towards a new object, and were turned into a religious war. The sentiments, however, of this feditious and dissolute multitude were greatly divided, and their demands were very different. . One part of them pleaded for an exemption from all laws, a licentious immunity from every fort of government; another, less outrageous and extravagant, confined their demands to a diminution of the taxes they were forced to pay, and of the burthens under which they groaned [d]; another infilted upon a new form of religious doctrine, government, and worship, upon the establishment of a pure and unspotted church, and, to add weight to this requisition, pretended, that it was suggested by the Holy Ghost, with which they were divinely and miraculously inspired; while a very considerable proportion of this furious rabble were without any distinct view or fixed purpose, and, being infected with the contagious spirit of sedition, and exasperated by the severity of their magistrates and rulers, went on headlong without reflection or forefight into every act of violence and cruelty which rebellion and enthusiasm could suggest: to that, if it cannot be denied that many of these rioters perversely misunderstood the doctrine of Luther concerning Christian liberty, and thence took occasion to commit the disorders that rendered them so justly odious, yet it would be a most absurd instance of partiality and injustice to charge that doctrine with the blame of those extravagant outrages which arose only from the manifest abuse of it. Luther himself, indeed, CENT. fufficiently defended both his principles and his cause against any such imputations by the books he wrote against this riotous sect, and the advice he addressed to the princes of the empire to take arms against them. Accordingly, in the year 1525, these turbulent malcontents were defeated in a pitched battle fought at Mulkausen; and Munzer, their ringleader, was put to death [e].

manifelt

[d] These burthens were the duties of vasialage or seudal services, which, in many respects, were truly grievous.

XXIII. While this fanatical insurrection raged Frederic the in Germany, Frederic the Wise, elector of Saxony, Wise dies, departed this life. This excellent prince, whose ceeded by character was distinguished by an uncommon degree John, 1325of prudence and moderation, had, during his life, been a fort of mediator between the Roman pontiff and the reformer of Wittenberg, and had always entertained the pleasing hope of restoring peace in the church, and of fo reconciling the contending parties as to prevent a separation either in point of ecclesiastical jurisdiction or religious communion. Hence it was, that while, on the one hand, he made no opposition to Luther's design of reforming a corrupt and superstitious church, but rather encouraged him in the execution of this pious purpose; yet, on the other, it is remarkable, that he was at no pains to introduce any change into the churches that were established in his own dominions, or to subject them to his jurisdiction. The elector John, his brother and fuccessor, acted in a very different manner. Convinced of the truth of Luther's doctrine, and persuaded, that it must lose ground and be soon suppressed if the despotic authority of the Roman pontiff remained undif-

[e] "Petri Gnodalii Historia de Seditione repentina Vulgi, przcipue Rusticorum, anno 1525, tempore verno per universam sere Germaniam exorta, Basil, 1570," in 8vo.—See also B. Tenzelii Histor. Reform. tom. ii. p. 331, and the observations of Ernest Cyprian upon that work.

CENT. puted and entire, he, without hesitation or delay, assumed to himself that supremacy in ecclesiastical matters which every lawful fovereign may claim as his natural right, and founded and established a church in his dominions, very different from the church of Rome, in doctrine, discipline, and government. To bring this new and happy establishment to as great a degree of perfection as was possible, this resolute and active prince ordered a body of laws, relating to the form of ecclesiastical government, the method of public worship, the rank, offices, and revenues of the priesthood, and other matters of that nature, to be drawn up by Luther and Melancthon, and promulgated by heralds throughout his dominions in the year 1527. He also took care that all the churches should be supplied with pious and learned ministers, and that such of the clergy as dishonoured religion by their bad morals, or were incapable, from their want of talents, of promoting its influence, should be removed from the facred function. The illustrious example of this elector was followed by all the princes and states of Germany that were unfriendly to the papal supremacy and jurisdiction; and similar forms of worship, discipline, and government, were thus introduced into all the churches which dissented Thus may the elector John be from that of Rome. considered as the second parent and founder of the Lutheran church, which he alone rendered a complete and independent body, distinct from the superstitious church of Rome, and fenced about with falutary laws, with a wife and well-balanced conftitution. But as the best blessings may, through the influence of human corruption, become the innocent occasions of great inconveniences, such particularly was the fate of those wife and vigorous measures which this elector took for the reformation of the church; for, from that time, the religious differences between the German princes, which had been CENT. hitherto kept within the bounds of moderation, XVI. broke out into a violent and lasting slame. The prudence, or rather timidity, of Frederic the Wife, who avoided every resolute measure that might tend to kindle the fire of discord, had preserved a sort of external union and concord among these princes, notwithstanding their difference in opinion. But as soon as his successor, by the open and undif-guised steps he took, made it glaringly evident, that he designed to withdraw the churches in his dominions from the jurisdiction of Rome, and to re-form the doctrine, discipline, and worship that had been hitherto established, then indeed the scene changed. The union, which was more specious than folid, and which was far from being wellcemented, was suddenly dissolved; the spirits were heated and divided, and an open rupture ensued between the German princes, of whom one party embraced the Reformation, while the other adhered to the superstitions of their forefathers.

XXIV. Affairs being reduced to this violent Spire in Spire in timations that were far from being ambiguous, of their intention to make war upon the Lutheran party, and to suppress by force the doctrines which they were incapable of overturning by argument; and this design would certainly have been put in execution, had not the troubles of Europe disconcerted their measures. The Lutherans, on the other hand, informed of these hostile intentions, began also to deliberate upon the most effectual methods of defending themselves against superstition armed with violence, and formed the plan of a confederacy that might answer this prudent purpose. mean time the diet, affembled at Spire in the year 1526, at which Ferdinand, the emperor's brother, presided, ended in a manner more favourable to F 3 the friends of the Reformation, than they could naturally expect. The emperor's ambassadors at this diet were ordered to use their most earnest endeavours for the suppression of all farther disputes concerning religion, and to insist upon the rigorous execution of the edict of Worms. The greatest part of the German princes opposed this motion with the utmost resolution, declaring, that they could not execute that fentence, nor come to any determination with respect to the doctrines by which it had been occasioned, before the whole matter was submitted to the cognizance of a general council lawfully assembled; alleging farther, that the decision of controversies of this nature belonged properly to fuch a council, and to it alone. This opinion, after long and warm debates, was adopted by a great majority; and, at length, consented to by the whole assembly; for it was unanimously agreed to present a solemn address to the emperor, beseeching him to assemble, without delay, a free and a general council; and it was also agreed, that, in the mean time, the princes and states of the empire should, in their respective dominions, be at liberty to manage ecclesiastical matters in the manner they should think the most expedient; yet so as to be able to give to God and to the emperor an account of their administration, when it should be demanded of them.

CENT. SECT. I.

The progress mation after the diet at Spire in 1527.

XXV. Nothing could be more favourable to of the refor those who had the cause of pure and genuine Christianity at heart, than a resolution of this nature. For the emperor was, at this time, so entirely taken up in regulating the troubled state of his dominions in France, Spain, and Italy, which exhibited, from day to day, new scenes of perplexity, that, for some years, it was not in his power to turn his attention to the affairs of Germany in in general, and still less to the state of religion in CENT. particular, which was beset with difficulties, that, XVI. to a reflecting politician like Charles, must have appeared peculiarly critical and dangerous. Besides, had he really been possessed of leisure to form, or of power to execute, a plan that might terminate, in favour of the Roman pontiff, the religious disputes which reigned in Germany, it is evident that the inclination was wanting, and that Clement VII., who now fat in the papal chair, had nothing to expect from the good offices of Charles. For this pontiff, after the defeat of Francis at the battle of Pavia, filled with uneafy apprehensions of the growing power of the emperor in Italy, entered into a confederacy with the French and the Venetians against that prince. This measure inflamed the resentment and indignation of Charles to such a degree, that he abolished the papal authority in his Spanish dominions, made war upon the pope in Italy, laid siege to Rome in the year 1527, blocked up Clement in the castle of St. Angelo, and exposed him to the most severe . and contumelious treatment. These critical events, together with the liberty granted by the diet of Spire, were prudently and industriously improved, by the friends of the Reformation, to the advantage of their cause, and to the augmentation of their number. Several princes, whom the fear of perfecution and punishment had hitherto prevented from lending a hand to the good work, being delivered now from their restraint, publicly renounced the superstition of Rome, and introduced among their subjects the same forms of religious worship, and the same system of doctrine, that had been received in Saxony. Others, though placed in fuch circumstances as discouraged them from acting in an open manner against the interests of the pope, were far from discovering the smallest F 4

CENT. XVI. opposition to those who withdrew the people from his despotic yoke; nor did they molest the private assemblies of those who had separated themselves from the church of Rome. And all the Germans who, before the resolutions of the diet of Spire, had rejected the papal discipline and doctrine, were now, in consequence of the liberty they enjoyed by these resolutions, wholly employed in bringing their schemes and plans to a certain degree of confistency, and in adding vigour and firmness to the glorious cause in which they were engaged. In the mean time, Luther and his fellow-labourers, particularly those who were with him at Wittenberg, by their writings, their instructions, their admo-. nitions and counsels, inspired the timorous with fortitude, dispelled the doubts of the ignorant, fixed the principles and resolution of the sloating and inconstant, and animated all the friends of genuine Christianity with a spirit suitable to the grandeur of their undertaking.

Another diet heidar Spire, in 1529. Origin of the denomination of Protestants.

XXVI. But the tranquillity and liberty they enjoyed, in contequence of the resolutions taken in the first diet of Spire, were not of a long duration. They were interrupted by a new diet assembled in the year 1529, in the same place, by the emperor, after he had appealed the commotions and troubles which had employed his attention in several parts of Europe, and concluded a treaty of peace with Clement VII. This prince, having now, in a great measure, shaken off the burtlen that had for some time overwhelmed him, had leisure to direct the affairs of the church; and this the reformers soon felt by a disagreeable experience. For the power, which had been granted by the former diet to every prince, of managing ecclesiastical matters as they thought proper, until the meeting of a general council, was now revoked by a majomajority of votes, and not only so, but every change was declared unlawful that should be introduced into the doctrine, discipline, or worship of the established religion, before the determination of the approaching council was known [f]. This decree was justly considered as iniquitous and intolerable by the elector of Saxony, the landgrave of Hesse, and such other members of the diet, as were persuaded of the necessity of a reformation in the church. Nor was any one so simple, or so little acquainted with the politics of Rome, as to look upon the promise of assembling speedily a general council, in any other light, than as an artifice to quiet the minds of the people; fince it was easy to perceive, that a lawful council, free from the despotic influence of Rome, was the very last thing that a pope would grant in such a critical state of affairs. Therefore, when the princes and members now mentioned found that all their arguments and remonstrances against this unjust decree made no impression upon Ferdinand [g], or upon the abettors of the ancient superstitions (whom the pope's legate animated by his presence and exhortations), they entered a folemn protest against this decree, on the 19th of April, and appealed to the emperor and to a future council [h]. Hence arole

The resolution of the first diet of Spire, which had been taken unanimously, was revoked in the second, and another substituted in its place by a plurality of voices, which, as several of the princes then present observed, could not give to any decree the sorce of a law throughout the empire.

The emperor was at Barcelona, while this diet was held at Spire; so that his brother Ferdinand was president in his place.

test, and are consequently to be considered as the first protestant princes, were John, elector of Suxony, George, elector of Brandenburg, for Francenia, Ernest and Francis, dukes of Luncaburg, the landgrave of Hesse, and the prince of Anhalt.

CENT. BECT. I.

arose the denomination of Protestants, given from this period to those who renounce the superstitious communion of the church of Rome.

Leagues formed protestants.

XXVII. The diffenting princes, who were the between the protectors and heads of the reformed churches, fooner entered their protest, than they fent proper persons to the emperor, who was then upon his passage from Spain to Italy, to acquaint him with their proceedings in this affair. ministers employed in this commission, executed the orders they had received with the greatest resolution and presence of mind, and behaved with the spirit and sirmness of the princes, whose sentiments and conduct they were sent to justify and The emperor, whose pride was wounded by this fortitude in persons that dared to oppose his 'designs, ordered the ambassadors to be apprehended, and detained for feveral days. gence of this violent step was soon brought to the protestant princes, and made them conclude that their personal safety, and the success of their cause, depended entirely upon their courage and concord, the one animated, and the other cemented by a folemn confederacy. They, therefore, held feveral meetings at Rot, Nuremberg, Smalcald, and other places, in order to deliberate upon the means of forming such a powerful league as might enable them to repel the violence of their ene-But so different were their opinions

> These princes were supported by thirteen imperial towns, viz. Strasburg, Ulm, Nuremberg, Constance, Rottingen, Windseim, Memmingen, Nordlingen, Lindaw, Kempten, Heilbron, Wiffemburg, and St. Gall.

> [i] See the history of the confession of Augsburg, written in German by the learned Christ. Aug. Salig, tom. i. book II. ch. i. p. 128. and more especially an important work by Dr. Joachim Muller, entitled Historie von der Evangelischen Stande Protestation gegen den Speyerschen Reichs-abscheid von 1529, Appellation, &c. published at Jena in 4to, in the year 1705.

and

and views of things, that they could come to no

fatisfactory conclusion.

XXVIII. Among the incidents that promoted animosity and discord between the friends of the The confer-Reformation, and prevented that union which purg, in was so much to be desired between persons embarked in the same good cause, the principal one was the dispute that had arisen between the divines of Saxony and Switzerland, concerning the manner of Christ's presence in the eucharist. To terminate this controversy, Philip, landgrave of Hesse, invited, in the year 1529, to a conference at Marpurg, Luther and Zuingle, with some of the most eminent doctors who adhered to the respective parties of these contending chiefs. This expedient, which was designed by that truly magranimous prince, not so much to end the matter by keen debate, as to accommodate differences by the conciliatory spirit of charity and prudence, was not attended with the falutary fruits that were expected from it. The divines that were assembled for this pacific purpose disputed, during four days, in presence of the landgrave. The principal champions in these debates were Luther, who attacked Œcolampadius, and Melancthon, who difputed against Zuingle; and the controversy turned upon several points of theology, in relation to which the Swiss doctors were supposed to entertain erroneous sentiments. For Zuingle was accused of herefy, not only on account of his explication of the nature and design of the Lord's Supper, but also in consequence of the false notions he was supposed to have adopted, relating to the divinity of Christ, the efficacy of the divine word, original fin, and fome other parts of the This illustrious reformer Christian doctrine. cleared himself, however, from the greatest part of these accusations, with the most triumphant evidence, and in such a manner as appeared entirely ence at Mare.

CENT.

CENT. XVI. SECT. I.

tirely satisfactory, even to Luther himself. Their dissension concerning the manner of Christ's presence in the eucharist still remained; nor could either of the contending parties be persuaded to abandon, or even to modify, their opinion of that matter [k]. The only advantage, therefore, that resulted from this conference, was, that the jarring doctors formed a fort of truce, by agreeing to a mutual toleration of their respective sentiments, and leaving the cure of their divisions to the disposal of Providence, and the effect of time, which sometimes cools the rage of party.

The diet of Augiburg.

XXIX. The ministers of the churches which had embraced the fentiments of Luther, were preparing a new embassy to the emperor, when an account was received of the intention of that prince to come into Germany, with a view of terminating, in the approaching diet at Augsburg, the religious disputes that had produced such animosities and divisions in the empire. Charles, though long absent from Germany, and engaged in affairs that left him little leisure for theological disquisitions, was nevertheless attentive to these disputes, and foresaw their consequences. He had also, to his own deliberate reflexions upon these disputes, added the counsels of men of wisdom, sagacity, and experience, and was thus, at certain feasons, rendered more cool in his proceedings, and more moderate and impartial in his opinion both of the contending parties and of the merits of the cause. He therefore, in an interview with the pope at Bologna, insisted, in the most serious and urgent manner, upon the necessity of assembling a general council. His CENT. remonstrances and expostulations could not, however, move Clement, who maintained with zeal the papal prerogatives, imputed to the emperor an illjudged clemency, and alleged that it was the duty of that prince to support the church, and to execute speedy vengeance upon the obstinate heretical faction, who dared to call in question the authority of Rome and its pontiff. The imperial potentate was as little affected by this haughty discourse, as the pope had been by his wife remonstrances, and looked upon it as a most iniquitous thing, a measure also in direct opposition to the laws of the empire, to condemn, unheard, and to destroy, without any evidence of their demerit, a fet of men, who had always approved themselves good citizens, and had in various respects deserved well of their country. Hitherto, indeed, it was not easy for Charles to form a clear idea of the matters in debate, fince there was no regular system as yet composed, of the doctrines embraced by Luther and his followers, by which their real opinions, and the true causes of their opposition to the Roman pontiff, might be known with certainty. As, therefore, it was impossible, without some declaration of this nature, to examine with accuracy, or decide with equity, a matter of such high importance as that which gave rife to the divisions between the votaries of Rome and the friends of the Reformation, the elector of Saxony ordered Luther, and other eminent divines, to commit to writing the chief articles of their religious fystem, and the principal points in which they differed from the church of Rome. Luther, in compliance with this order, delivered to the elector, at Torgaw, the seventeen articles, which had been drawn up and voted the conference at Sultzbach in the year 1529; and hence they were CENT. XVI. called the articles of Torgaw [1]. Though these articles were deemed by Luther a sufficient declaration of the sentiments of the reformers, yet it was judged proper to enlarge them; and, by a judicious detail, to give perspicuity to the arguments, and thereby strength to the cause. It was this consideration that engaged the protestant princes, assembled at Coburg and Augsburg, to employ Melancthon in extending these Articles, in which important work he shewed a due regard to the counsels of Luther, and expressed his sentiments and doctrine with the greatest elegance and perspicuity. And thus came forth to public view the samous consession of Augsburg, which did such honour to the acute judgment and the eloquent pen of Melancthon.

[k] Val. Ern. Loscheri Historia motuum inter Lutberanos et Resormatos, tom. i. lib. i. cap. vi. p. 143.—Henr. Bullingeri Historia Colloquii Marpurgensis, in Jo. Conr. Fuessin's compilation, intituled, Beytragen zur Schweizer Resormat. Geschichte, tom. iii. p. 156. See also the Presace, p. 80.—Abr. Sculteti Annal. Resormat. ad A. 1529.—Rudolph. Hospiniani Histor. Sacramentar. par. II. p. 72, &c.

The progress of the reformation in Sweden, about the year 1530.

XXX. During these transactions in Germany, the dawn of truth arose upon other nations. light of the reformation spread itself far and wide; and almost all the European states welcomed its salutary beams, and exulted in the prospect of an approaching deliverance from the yoke of superstition and spiritual despotism. Some of the most considerable provinces of Europe had already broken their chains, and openly withdrawn themselves from the discipline of Rome and the jurisdiction of its pontiff. And thus it appears that Clement VII. was not impelled by a false alarm to demand of the emperor the speedy extirpation of the reformers, since he had the justest reasons to apprehend the destruction of his spiritual empire. The reformed religion was propagated in Sweden, soon after Luther's rupture with Rome, by one of his disciples, whose name was Olaus Petri, and who CENT. was the first herald of religious liberty in that XVI. kingdom. The zealous efforts of this missionary were powerfully seconded by that valiant and public-spirited prince, Gustavus Vasa Ericson, whom the Swedes had raised to the throne in the place of Christiern, king of Denmark, whose horrid barbarity lost him the sceptre that he had perfidiously usurped. This generous and patriotic hero had been in exile and in prison, while the brutal usurper now mentioned, was involving his country in defolation and misery; but having escaped from his confinement and taken refuge at Lubeck, he was there instructed in the principles of the Reformation, and looked upon the doctrine of Luther, not only as agreeable to the genius and spirit of the gospel, but also as favourable to the temporal state and political constitution of the Swedish dominions. The prudence, however, of this excellent prince was equal to his zeal, and always accompanied it. And as the religious opinions of the Swedes were in a fluctuating state, and their minds divided between their ancient superstitions, recommended by custom, and the doctrine of Luther, which attracted their affent by the power of conviction and truth, Gustavus wisely avoided all vehemence and precipitation in spreading the new doctrine, and proceeded in this important undertaking with circumspection, and by degrees, in a manner fuitable to the principles of the reformation, which are diametrically opposite to compulsion and violence [m]. cordingly, proofs of his wisdom and moderation. Once, while he was absent from Stockholm, a great number of German anabaptists, probably the riotous disciples of Munzer, arrived in that city, carried their fanaticism to extremities, and pulled down with sury the images and other ornaments of the churches, while the Lutheraise dissembled their sentiments of this riot in expectation

<sup>[1]</sup> See Chr. Aug. Heumanni Diff. de lenitate Augustana Confess. in Sylloge Dissert. Theologicar. tom. i. p. 14.—Jo. Joach. Muller's Historia Protestationis; and the other writers who have treated, either of the Reformation in general, or of the consession of Augsburg in particular.

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1.

cordingly, the first object of his attention was the instruction of his people in the sacred doctrines of the Holy Scriptures, for which purpose he invited into his dominions feveral learned Germans, and spread abroad through the kingdom Petri's Swedish translation of the Bible [n]. Some time after this, in the year 1526, he appointed a conference, at Upsal, between this eminent reformer and Peter Gallius, a zealous defender of the ancient superstition, in which these two champions were to plead publicly in behalf of their respective opinions, that it might thus be seen on which side the truth lay. The dispute, in which Olaus obtained a fignal victory, contributed much to confirm Gustavus in his persuasion of the truth of Luther's doctrine, and to promote the progress of that doctrine in Sweden. In the following year, another event gave the finishing stroke to its propagation and success, and this was the assembly of the states at Westeraas, where Gustavus recommended the doctrine of the reformers with fuch zeal, wisdom, and piety, that, after warm debates fomented by the clergy in general, and much opposition on the part of the bishops in particular, it was voted that the plan of reformation proposed by Luther should have free

Gustavus no sooner returned to Stockholm, than he ordered the leaders of these fanatics to be seized and punished, and covered the Lutherans with bitter reproaches for not having opposed them in time.

[n] It is very remarkable, and shews the equity and candour of Gustavus in the most striking point of light, that while he ordered Olaus Petri to publish his literal translation of the sacred writings, he gave permission at the same time to the archbishop of Upsal, to prepare another version suited to the doctrine of the church of Rome; that, by a careful comparison of both translations with the original, an easier access might be opened to the truth. The bishops at first opposed this order, but were at length obliged to submit.

admit-

admittance among the Swedes [o]. This reso- CENT. lution was principally owing to the firmness and magnanimity of Gustavus, who declared publicly, that he would lay down his sceptre, and retire from his kingdom, rather than rule a people enflaved to the orders and authority of the pope, and more controlled by the tyranny of their bishops, than by the laws of their monarch [p]. From this time the papal empire in Sweden was entirely overturned, and the king acted as head of the church.

XXXI. The light of the reformation was also In Dear received in Denmark, and that so early as the year 1521, in consequence of the ardent desire disco-

- [0] It was no wonder indeed that the bishops opposed warmly the proposal of Gustavus, since there was no country in Europe where that order and the clergy in general drew greater temporal advantages from the superstition of the times than in Sweden and Denmark. Most of the bishops had revenues superior to those of the sovereign; they possessed castles and fortresses that rendered them independent of the crown, enabled them to excite commotions in the kingdom, and gave them a degree of power that was dangerous to the state. They lived in the most dissolute luxury and overgrown opulence, while many of the nobles were in misery and want. The resolution formed by the states assembled at Westeraas, did not so much tend to regulate points of doctrine, as to reform the discipline of the church, to reduce the opulence and authority of the bishops within proper bounds, to restore to the impoverished nobility the lands and possessions that their superflitious ancestors had given to an all-devouring clergy, to exclude the prelates from the senate, to take from them. their castles, and things of that nature. It was however resolved, at the same time, that the church should be provided with able pattors, who should explain the pure word of God to the people in their native tongue; and that no ecclesiastical preferments should be granted without the king's permission. This was a tacit and gentle method of promoting the Retormation.
- [ Bazii Inventarium Eccles. Sueco-Gothor. published in 4to at Lincoping in 1642. Sculteti Annales Evangelii Rezovati, in Von-der-Hardt's Histor. Liter. Reformat. part V. Raynal, Anecdotes Hist. Politiques et Militaires, p. 83 et 110. tome i. part II.

-vered

CENT. vered by Christian or Christiern II. of having his subjects instructed in the principles and doctrines of Luther. This monarch, whose savage and infernal cruelty (either the effect of natural temper, or of bad counsels) rendered his name odious and his memory execrable, was nevertheless desirous of delivering his dominions from the superstition and tyranny of Rome. For this purpose, in the year 1520, he fent for Martin Reinard, one of the disciples of Carlostadt, out of Saxony, and appointed him professor of divinity at Copenhagen; and after his death, which happened in the following year, he invited Carlostadt himself to fill that important place, which he accepted indeed, but, after a short residence in Denmark, returned into Germany. These disappointments did not abate the reforming spirit of the Danish monarch, who used his utmost endeavours, though in vain, to engage Luther to visit his dominions, and took several steps that tended to the diminution, and, indeed, to the suppression of the jurisdiction, exercised over his subjects by the Roman pontiff.

It is, however, proper to observe, that, in all these proceedings, Christiern II. was animated by no other motive than that of ambition. the prospect of extending his authority, and not a zeal for the advancement of true religion, that gave life and vigour to his reformative projects.

His very actions, independently of what may be concluded from his known character, evidently shew, that he protected the religion of Luther with no other view than to rife by it to fupremacy, both in church and state, and to find a pretext for depriving the bishops of that overgrown an thority, and those ample possessions which they had gradually usurped [q], and which he wished to appropriate to himself. A revolution produced by his avarice, tyranny, and cruelty, prevented the execution of this bold enterprize. The states of the kingdom exasperated, some by his schemes for destroying the liberty of Denmark, others by his attempts to abolish the superstition of their ancestors [r], and all by his savage and barbarous treatment of those who dared to oppose his avarice or ambition, formed a conspiracy against him in the year 1523, by which he was deposed and banished from his dominions, and his uncle Frederic, duke of Holstein and Sleswic, placed on the Danish throne.

[q] See Jo. Gramii Diff. de Reformatione Dania à Christierno tentata, in the third volume of the Scriptores Societ. Scientiarum Hafniens. p. 1-90.

CENT.

The progress of the Rethe reigns of Frederic tiern III.

XXXII. This prince conducted matters with much more equity, prudence, and moderation, formation in than his predecessor had done. He permitted the protestant doctors to preach publicly the opinions and Chrisof Luther [s], but did not venture so far as to change the established government and discipline of the church. He contributed, however, greatly to the progress of the reformation, by his successful attempts in favour of religious liberty, in the assembly of the states holden at Odensee in the year 1527. For it was here that he procured the publication of that famous edict, which declared every subject of Denmark free, either to adhere to the tenets of the church of Rome, or to [r] See, for a confirmation of this part of the accusation, a curious piece, containing the reasons that induced the states of Denmark to renounce their allegiance to Christiern. This piece is to be found in the fifth volume of Ludewig's compilation, entitled, Reliquie Manuscriptorum, in which (p. 321.) the states of Denmark express their displeasure, at the royal favour shewn to the Lutherans, in the following terms: Lutheranz hzresis pullulatores, contra jus pietatemque, in regnum nostrum catholicum introduxit; doctorem Carolofadium, fortissimum Lutheri athletam, enutrivit."

[3] See Jo. Molleri Cimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 886 .--Christ. Olivarii Vita Pauli Elia, p. 108.—Erici Pontoppi-

dani Annales Esslesie Danice, tom. üi. p. 139.

embrace

CENT. XVI. SECT. I.

embrace the doctrine of Luther [t]. Encouraged by this resolution, the protestant divines exercised the functions of their ministry with such zeal and fuccess, that the greatest part of the Danes opened their eyes upon the auspicious beams of sacred liberty, and abandoned gradually both the doctrines and jurisdiction of the church of Rome. But the honour of finishing this glorious work, of destroying entirely the reign of superstition, and breaking afunder the bonds of papal tyranny, was reserved for Christiern III. a prince equally distinguished by his piety and prudence. He began by suppressing the despotic authority of the bishops, and by restoring to their lawful owners a great part of the wealth and possessions which the church had acquired by the artful stratagems of the crafty and designing clergy. This step was followed by a wife and well-judged fettlement of religious doctrine, discipline, and worship, throughout the kingdom, according to a plan laid down by Bugenhagius, whom the king had invited from Wittenberg to perform that arduous task, for which his eminent piety, learning, and moderation, rendered him peculiarly proper. The assembly of the states at Odensee, in the year 1539, gave 2. solemn fanction to all these transactions; and thus the work of the reformation was brought to perfection in Denmark  $\lceil u \rceil$ .

XXXIII. le

[u] See a German work of the learned Eric Pontoppiden, entitled, A Compendious View of the History of the Reference tion in Denmark, published at Lubeck in 8vo, in 1734; 10 fhould be molested on account of his religion; that a royal protection should be granted to the Lutherans to defend them from the insults and malignity of their enemies; and that ecclesiastics, of whatever rank or order, should be permitted to enter into the married state, and to fix their residence wherever they thought proper, without any regard to monasteries, or other religious societies.

CENT. XVI.

SECT. I.

to be ob-

we speak of the refor-

Denmark.

XXXIII. It is however to be observed, that, in the history of the reformation of Sweden and Denmark, we must carefully distinguish between the reformation of religious opinions, and that of the Adistinction episcopal order. For though these two things may served when appear to be closely connected, yet, in reality, they are so far distinct, that either of the two mation of might have been completely transacted without Sweden and the other. A reform of doctrine might have been effected, without diminishing the authority of the bishops, or suppressing their order; and, on the other hand, the opulence and power of the bishops might have been reduced within proper bounds, without introducing any change into the fystem of doctrine that had been so long established, and that was generally received [w]. In the measures taken in these northern kingdoms, for the reformation of a corrupt doctrine and a superstitious discipline, there was nothing that deserved the fmallest censure: neither fraud nor violence were employed for this purpose; on the contrary, all things were conducted with wisdom and moderation, in a manner suitable to the dictates of equity and the spirit of Christianity. The same judgment cannot easily be pronounced with respect to the methods of proceeding in the reformation of the clergy, and more especially of the episcopal also the Annales Ecclesia Danica, of the same author, tom. ii. p. 790. tom. iii. p. 1.—See also the work of Henry Muhl, de Reformat. Religionis in vicinis Danie regionibus et potissimem in Cimbria, in ejus Dissertationibus Historico-Theologicis,

p. 24. Kilia, 1715, in 4to.

[w] This observation is not worthy of Dr. Mosheim's fagacity. The strong connection between superstitious ignorance among the people, and influence and power in their spiritual rulers, is too evident to stand in need of any proof. A good clergy will, or ought to have an influence, in confequence of a respectable office, adorned with learning, piety, and morals; but the power of a licentious and despotic clergy can be only supported by the blind and superstitious credulity of their flock.

order.

XVI. and the bishops were deprived of their honours, privileges, and possessions, without their consent; indeed, notwithstanding the greatest struggles and the warmest opposition [x]. The truth is, that so far as the reformation in Sweden and Denmark regarded the privileges and possessions of the bishops, it was rather a matter of political expediency than of religious obligation; for a change here had become so necessary, that, had Luther and his doctrine never appeared in the world, it must have been nevertheless attempted by a wise legisla-For the bishops, by a variety of perfidious stratagems, had gotten into their hands such

> (*) What does Dr. Mosheim mean here? Did ever an usurper give up his unjust possessions without reluctance? Does rapine constitute a right, when it is maintained by force? Is it unlawful to use violence against extortioners? The qualtion here is, whether the bishops deserved the severe treatmen. hey received from Christiern III.; and our author seems to answ this question in the affirmative, and to declare this treatment both just and necessary, in the following part of this section. Certain it is, that the bishops were treated with great severity, deposed from their sees, imprisoned on account of their resistance; all the church lands, towns and fortresses, were annexed to the crown, and the temporal power of the clergy for ever abolished. It is also certain, that Luther himself looked upon these measures as violent and excessive, and even wrote a letter to Christiern, exhorting him to use the clergy with more lenity. It is therefore proper to decide with moderation on this subject, and to grant, that if the insolence and licentiousness of the clergy were enormous, the resentment of the Danish monarch may have been excessive, Nor indeed was his political prudence here so great as Dr. Mosheim seems to represent it; for the equipoise of government was hurt, by a total suppression of the power of the The nobility acquired by this a prodigious degree of influence, and the crown loft an order, which, under proper regulations, might have been rendered one of the strongest supports of its prerogative. But disquisitions of this nature are foreign to our purpose. It is only proper to observe, that, in the room of the bishops, Christiern created an order of men, with the denomination of Superintendants, who performed the spiritual part of the episcopal office without the least shadow of temporal authority.

enormous

enormous treasures, such ample possessions, so CENT. many castles and fortified towns, and had assumed XVI. fuch an unlimited and despotic authority, that they were in a condition to give law to the fovereign himself, to rule the nation as they thought proper; and in effect, already abused their power so far as to appropriate to themselves a considerable part of the royal patrimony, and of the pubhic revenues of the kingdom. Such, therefore, was the critical state of these northern kingdoms, in the time of Luther, that it became absolutely necesfary, either to degrade the bishops from that rank which they dishonoured, and to deprive them of the greatest part of those possessions and prerogatives which they had so unjustly acquired and so licentiously abused, or to see, tamely, royalty rendered contemptible by its weakness, the sovereign deprived of the means of protecting and succouring his people, and the state exposed to rebellion, misery, and ruin.

XXXIV. The kingdom of France was not in. The rife and accessible to the light of the Reformation. Mar- the reformagaret queen of Navarre, sister to Francis I, mation in the implacable enemy and perpetual rival of Charles V. was inclined to favor the new doctrine, which delivered pure and genuine Christianity from a great part of the superstitions under which it had so long lain disguised. The auspicious patronage of this illustrious princess encouraged several pious and learned men, whose religious sentiments were the same with her's, to propagate the principles of the Reformation in France, and even to erect several protestant churches in that kingdom. It is manifest from the most authentic records, that, so early as the year 1523, there were, in several of the provinces of that country, multitudes of persons, who had conceived the utmost disgust to the doctrine and tyranny

04

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1. tyranny of Rome; and among these were many persons of rank and dignity, and even some of the episcopal order. As their numbers increased from day to day, and troubles and commotions were excited in several places on account of religious differences, the authority of the monarch and the cruelty of his officers intervened, to support the doctrine of Rome, by the edge of the sword and the terrors of the gibbet; and on this occasion many persons, eminent for their piety and virtue, were put to death with the most unrelenting barbarity [y]. Although this cruelty, instead of retarding, accelerated the progress of the Reformation, yet, in the reign of Francis, the restorers of genuine Christianity were not always equally successful and happy. Their fituation was extremely uncertain, and it was perpetually changing. Sometimes they seemed to enjoy the auspicious shade of royal protection; at others they groaned under the weight of perfecution, and at certain feasons they were forgotten, which oblivion rendered their condition tolerable. Francis, who had either no religion at all, or, at best, no fixed and consistent system of religious principles, conducted himself towards the protestants in such a manner as answered his private and personal views, or as reasons of policy and a public interest seemed to require. When it became necessary to engage in his cause the German protestants, in order to foment sedition and rebellion against his mortal enemy Charles V. then did he treat the protestants in France with the utmost equity, humanity, and gentleness; but so soon as he had gained his point, and had no more occasion for their services, he threw [y] See Beza, Histoire des Eglises Resormées de France, tome i. liv. i. p. 5.—Benoit, Histoire de l'Edit de Nantes, liv. i. p. 6.—Christ. Aug. Salig, Histor. August. Consession vol. ii. p. 190.

CENT,

off the mask, and appeared to them in the aspect of an implacable and perfecuting tyrant [z].

About this time the famous Calvin, upon whose character, talents, and religious exploits, we shall have occasion to dwell more amply in the course of this history, began to draw the attention of the public, but more especially of the queen of Navarre. He was born at Noyon in Picardy, on the 10th of July, 1509, and was bred to the law [a], in which, as well as in all the other branches of literature, then known, his studies were attended with the most rapid and amazing success. Having acquired the knowledge of religion, by a diligent perusal of the holy scriptures, he began early to perceive the necessity of reforming the established system of doctrine and worship. His zeal exposed him to various perils; and the connexions he had formed with the friends of the Reformation, whom Francis was daily committing to the flames, placed him more than once in imminent danger, from which he was delivered by the good offices of the

The inconsistency and contradiction that were visible in the conduct of Francis I. may be attributed to various reasons. At one time, we see him resolved to invite Melancthon into France, probably with a view to please his fister the queen of Navarre, whom he loved tenderly, and who had strongly imbibed the principles of the protestants. At another time, we behold him exercising the most infernal cruelty towards the friends of the Resormation, and hear him making that mad declaration, that, " if he thought the blood in his arm was tainted with the Lutheran heresy, he would order it to be cut off; and that he would not spare even his own children, if they entertained sentiments contrary to those of the catholic church." See Flor. de Remond, Hist. de la Naissance et du Progres de l'Heresse, liv. vii.

[a] He was originally defigned for the church, and had actually obtained a benefice; but the light that broke in upon his religious sentiments, as well as the preserence given by his father to the profession of the law, induced him to give up his ecclesiastic vocation, which he afterwards resumed in a purer church.

excel-

The History of the Reformation.

excellent queen of Navarre. To escape the impending storm, he retired to Basil, where he published his Christian Institutions; and prefixed to them that famous dedication to Francis, which has attracted the admiration of succeeding ages, and which was designed to soften the unrelenting sury of that prince against the protestants [b].

In the research

NT.

VI.

XXXV. The instances of an opposition to the doctrine and discipline of Rome, in the other European states, were few in number, before the diet of Augsburg, and were too faint, impersect, and ambiguous, to make much noise in the world. It, however, appears from the most authentic testimonies, that, even before that period, the doctrine of Luther had made a confiderable, though perhaps a secret, progress in Spain, Hungary, Bohemia, Britain, Poland, and the Netherlands, and had, in all these countries, many friends, of whom several repaired to Wittenberg, to improve their knowlege and enlarge their views under fuch an eminent master. Some of these countries openly broke asunder the chains of superstition, and withdrew themselves, in a public and constitutional manner. from the jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff. others, a prodigious number of families received the light of the blessed Reformation; rejected the doctrines and authority of Rome; and, notwithstanding the calamities and persecutions they have suffered, on account of their sentiments, under the Motheim's text by the translator, who was surprised to find, in a History of the Reformation, such late mention made of one of its most distinguished and remarkable instruments; a man whose extensive genius, slowing eloquence, immense learning, extraordinary penetration, indefatigable industry, and fervent piety, placed him at the head of the Reformers; all of whom he surpassed, at least, in learning and parts, as he also did the greater part of them in obstinacy, asperity, and turbulence.

sceptre.

sceptre of bigotry and superstition, continue still in the profession of the pure doctrines of Chris- sect. 1. flianity; while in other, still more unhappy, lands, the most barbarous tortures, the most infernal spirit of cruelty, together with penal laws adapted to strike terror into the firmest minds, have extinguished, almost totally, the light of religious truth. It is, indeed, certain, and the Roman catholics themselves acknowlege it without hesitation, that the papal doctrines, jurisdiction, and authority, would have fallen into ruin in all parts of the world, had not the force of the secular arm been employed to support this tottering edifice, and fire and fword been let loose upon those who were affailing it only with reason and argument,

CENT.

CHAP. III.

The History of the Reformation, from the time when the Confession of Augsburg was presented to Charles V. until the commencement of the war which succeeded the league of Smalcalde,

I. THE emperor arrived at Augsburg on the 15th The confession of June, 1530; and, on the 20th day of the Augsburg same month, the diet was opened. As it was una- presented to pimously agreed, that the affairs of religion should be brought upon the carpet before the deliberations relating to the intended war with the Turks, the protestant members of this great assembly received from the emperor a formal permission to present to the diet, on the 25th of June, an account of their religious principles and tenets. In consequence of this, Christian Bayer, chancellor of Saxony, read, in the German language, in presence of the emperor and the affembled princes, the famous confession which has been since distinguished by tho

Charles V.

CENT. XVI. SECT. I. the denomination of the Confession of Aug sburg. The princes heard it with the deepest attention and recollection of mind; it confirmed some in the principles they had embraced, surprised others; and many, who, before this time, had little or no idea of the religious sentiments of Luther, were now not only convinced of their innocence, but were, moreover, delighted with their purity and simplicity. The copies of this confession, which, after being read, were delivered to the emperor, were figned and subscribed by John, elector of Saxony, by four princes of the empire, namely, George, marquis of Brandenburg, Ernest, duke of Lunenburg, Philip, landgrave of Hesse, Wolfgang, prince of Anhalt, and by the imperial cities of Nuremberg and Reutlingen, who all thereby folemnly declared their affent to the doctrines contained in it  $\lceil c \rceil$ .

The nature and contents of the confession of Augsburg.

II. The tenor and contents of the confession of Aug sburg are well known; at least, by all who have the smallest acquaintance with ecclesiastical history; since that confession was adopted by the whole body of the protestants as the rule of their faith. The style that reigns in it is plain, elegant, grave, and perspicuous, such as becomes the nature of the subject, and such as might be expected from the admirable pen of Melancthon. The matter was, undoubtedly, supplied by Luther, who, during the diet, resided at Coburg, a town in the

neigh, •

[c] There is a very voluminous history of the diet, which was published in the year 1577, in solio, at Frankfort on the Oder, by the laborious George Celestine. The history of the Confession of Augsburg, was composed in Latin by David Chytrzus, and more recently in German, by Ern. Solom. Cyprian and Christopher Aug. Salig. The performance of the latter is rather, indeed, a history of the Reformation in general, than of the Confession of Augsburg in particular. That of Cyprian is more concise and elegant, and is confirmed by original pieces, which are equally authentic and curious.

CENT.

neighbourhood of Augsburg; and even the form it received from the eloquent pen of his colleague, sect. 1. was authorifed by his approbation and advice. This confession contains twenty-eight chapters, of which the greatest part [d] are employed in representing, with perspicuity and truth, the religious opinions of the protestants, and the rest in pointing out the errors and abuses that occasioned their separation from the church of  $Rome \lceil e \rceil$ .

III. The creatures of the Roman pontiff, who The Roman were present at this diet, employed John Faber, catholics attempt a afterwards bishop of Vienne in Dauphiné, together resultation with Eckius, and another doctor named Cochlæus, of it. to draw up a refutation of this famous confession. This pretended refutation having been read publicly in the assembly, the emperor required of the protestant members that they would acquiesce in it, and put an end to their religious debates by an unlimited submission to the doctrines and opinions contained in this answer. But this demand was

[d] Twenty-one chapters were so employed; the other seven contained a detail of the errors and superstitions of the Romish church.

[e] It is proper to observe here, that, while the Lutherans presented their confession to the diet, another excellent remonstrance of the same nature was addressed to this august affembly by the cities of Strasburg, Constance, Memingen, and Lindaw, which had rejected the errors and jurisdiction of Rome, but did not enter into the Lutheran league, because they adopted the opinions of Zuingle in relation to the eucharist. The declaration of these four towns (called for that reason the Tetrapolitan Confession) was drawn up by the excellent Martin Bucer, and was considered as a master-piece of reasoning and eloquence, not only by the protestants, but even by several of the Roman catholics; and among others by M. Du-Pin. Zuingle also sent to this diet a private confesfon of his religious opinions. It is, however, remarkable, that though Bycer composed a separate remonstrance, his name appears among the subscribers at Smalcalde, in the year 1537, to the confession of Augsburg, and to Melancthon's defence of it. far far from being complied with. The Protestants declared, on the contrary, that they were by no means satisfied with the reply of their adversaries, and earnestly desired a copy of it, that they might demonstrate more fully its extreme insufficiency and weaknefs. This reasonable request was refused by the emperor, who, on this occasion, as well as on feveral others, shewed more regard to the importunity of the pope's legate and his party, than to the demands of equity, candour, and justice. even interposed his supreme authority to suspend any farther proceeding in this matter, and folemnly prohibited the publication of any new writings or declarations that might contribute to lengthen out these religious debates. This, however, did not reduce the protestants to silence. The divines of that communion, who had been present at the diet, endeavoured to recollect the arguments and objections employed by Faber, and again had recourse to the pen of Melancthon, who refuted them in an ample and fatisfactory manner, in a learned piece that was presented to the emperor on the 22d of September, but which that prince refused to This answer was afterwards enlarged by Melancthon, when he had obtained a copy of Faber's reply, and was published in the year 1531, with the other pieces that related to the doctrine and discipline of the Lutheran church, under the title of A Defence of the Confession of Augsburg.

CENT. XVI.

Deliberations concerning the method to be used in terminating this dispute IV. There were only three ways left of bringing to a conclusion these religious differences, which it was, in reality, most difficult to reconcile. The first and the most rational method was to grant, to those who refused to submit to the doctrine and jurisdiction of Rome, the liberty of following their private judgment in matters of a religious nature, and the privilege of serving God according to the dictates of their conscience, with a proviso that the public

public tranquillity should not be disturbed. The CENT second, and, at the same time, the shortest and XVI. most iniquitous expedient, was to end these disfensions by military apostles, who, sword in hand, should force the protestants to return to the bosom of the church, and to court the papal yoke, which they had so magnanimously thrown off their necks. Some thought of a middle way, which lay equally remote from the difficulties that attended the two methods now mentioned, and proposed that a reconciliation should be made upon fair, candid, and equitable terms, by engaging each of the contending parties to temper their zeal with moderation, to abate reciprocally the rigour of their pretensions, and remit some of their respective claims. The first method, which seemed agreeable to the dictates of reason, charity, and justice, was highly approved by feveral wife and good men, on both sides; but it was ill-suited to the arrogant ambition of the Roman pontiff, and the superstitious ignorance of the times, which beheld with horror whatever tended to introduce the sweets of religious liberty, or the exercise of private judgment. The fecond method, being violent and inhuman, was more agreeable to the spirit and sentiments of the age, and was peculiarly suited to the despotic genius and sanguinary zeal of the court of Rome: but the emperor had sufficient prudence and equity to induce him to reject it; and it appeared shocking to those who were not lost to all sentiments of justice or moderation. The third expedient was therefore most generally approved: it was peculiarly agreeable to all who were zealous for the interests and tranquillity of the empire; nor did the pontiff feem to look upon it either with aversion or contempt. Hence various conferences ensued between persons of eminence, CENT. XVI. nence, piety, and learning, who were chosen for that purpose from both sides; and nothing was omitted that might have the least tendency to calm the animolity, heal the divisions, and unite the hearts of the contending parties [f]; but all endeavours proved fruitless, since the difference of opinion was too considerable, and too important to admit a reconciliation. It was in these conferences that the spirit and character of Melancthon appeared in their true and genuine colours; and it was here that the votaries of Rome exhausted their efforts to gain over to their party this pillar of the Reformation, whose abilities and virtues added such a lustre to the protestant cause. This humane and gentle spirit was apt to sink into a kind of yielding foftness under the influence of mild and generous treatment. And, accordingly, while his adversaries soothed him with fair words and flattering promifes, he seemed to melt as they spoke, and, in some measure, to comply with their demands; but when they so far forgot themselves as to make use of imperious language and menacing terms, then did Melancthon appear in a very different point of light; then

(f) As in the confession of Augsburg there were three forts of articles; one fort orthodox, and adopted by both fides, another that consisted of certain propositions, which the papal party considered as ambiguous and obscure; and a third, in which the doctrine of Luther was entirely opposite to that of Rome; this gave some reason to hope, that by the means of certain concessions and modifications, conducted mutually by a spirit of candour and charity, matters might at last be accommodated. For this purpose, select persons were appointed to carry on this falutary work, at first seven from each party, confisting of princes, lawyers, and divines; which number was afterwards reduced to three. As Luther's obstinate, stubborn, and violent temper, rendered him unfit for healing divisions, he was not employed in these conferences; but be was constantly consulted by the Protestant party, and it was with a view to this that he resided at Coburg.

a spirit of intrepidity, ardor, and independence, CENT. animated all his words and actions, and he looked down with contempt on the threats of power, the frowns of fortune, and the fear of death. The truth is, that, in this great and good man, a foft and yielding temper was joined with the most inviolable fidelity, and the most invincible attachment to the truth.

V. This method of terminating the religious The result of debates, between the friends of liberty and these conserthe votaries of Rome, proving ineffectual, the latter had recourse to other measures, which were fuited to the iniquity of the times, though they were disavowed by the dictates of reason and the precepts of the gospel. These measures were, the force of the secular arm, and the authority of imperial edicts. On the 19th day of November, a severe decree was issued, by the express order of the emperor, during the absence of the Hessian and Saxon princes, who were the chief supporters of the protestant cause; and, in this decree, every thing was manifestly calculated to deject the friends of religious liberty, if we except a faint and dubious promise of engaging the pope to assemble (in about six months after the separation of the diet) a general council. dignity and excellence of the papal religion are extolled, beyond measure, in this partial decree; new degrees of severity and force were added to the edict of Worms; the changes that had been introduced into the doctrine and discipline of the protestant churches, were severely censured; and a soleran order addressed to the princes, states, and cities, that had thrown off the papal yoke, to return to their duty and their allegiance to Rome, on pain of incurring the indignation and vengeance

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1.

The league of Smaleald.

of the emperor, as the patron and protector of the church  $\lceil g \rceil$ .

VI. No fooner were the elector of Saxony and the confederate princes informed of this deplorable issue of the diet of Augsburg, than they assembled in order to deliberate upon the measures that were proper to be taken on this critical occasion. In the year 1530, and the year following, they met, first at Smalcald, afterwards at Frankfort, and formed a solemn alliance, with the intention of defending vigorously their religion and liberties against the dangers and encroachments with which they were menaced by the edict of Augsburg, without attempting, however, any thing positively offensive against the votaries of Rome. Into this confederacy they invited the kings of England, France, and Denmark, with several other republics and states, and left no means unemployed that might tend to corroborate and cement this important alliance [h]. Amidst these intrigues and prepa-

[g] To give the greater degree of weight to this edict, it was resolved, that no judge who resused to approve and subscribe its contents, should be admitted into the imperial chamber of Spire, which is the supreme court in Germany. The emperor also, and the popish princes, engaged themselves to employ their united forces in order to maintain its authority, and to promote its execution.

[b] Luther, who at first seemed averse to this consederacy, from an apprehension of the calamities and troubles it might produce, at length perceived its necessity, and consented to it; but, uncharitably, as well as imprudently, refused to comprehend in it the followers of Zuingle among the Swiss, together with the German states or cities, which had adopted the sentiments and confession of Bucer. And yet we find that the cities of Ulm and Augsburg had embraced the Resormation on the principles of Zuingle.—In the invitation addressed to Henry VIII. king of England, whom the affociated princes were willing to declare the head and protector of their league, the following points were expressly stipulated among several others: viz. That the king should encourage, promote, rations, which portended an approaching rupture, the electors of Mentz and of the Palatinate offered their mediation, and endeavoured to reconcile the contending princes. With respect to the emperor, various reasons united to turn his views towards peace. For, on the one hand, he stood in need of succours against the Turks, which the protestant princes resused to grant while the edicts of Worms and Augsburg remained in force; and, on the other, the election of his brother Ferdinand to the dignity of king of the Romans, which had been concluded by a majority of votes, promote, and maintain the true doctrine of Christ, as it was contained in the confession of Augsburg, and defend the same at the next general council;—that he should not agree to any council fummoned by the bishop of Rome, but protest against it, and neither submit to its decrees, nor suffer them to be respected in his dominions; that he should never allow the pontiff to have any pre-eminence or jurisdiction in his dominions;that he should advance 100,000 crowns for the use of the confederacy, and double that fum if it should appear to be necesfary; all which articles the confederate princes were obliged equally to observe on their part. To these demands the king answered, immediately, in a manner that was not satisfactory. He declared, that he would maintain and promote the true doctrine of Christ; but, at the same time, as the true ground of that doctrine lay only in the Holy Scriptures, he would not accept, at any one's hand, what should be his faith, or that of his kingdoms, and therefore defired they would fend over learned men to confer with him, in order to promote a religious union between him and the confederates. He moreover declared himfelf of their opinion with respect to the meeting of a free general council, and promised to join with them, in all such councils, for the defence of the true doctrine; but thought the regulation of the ceremonial part of religion, being a matter of indifference, ought to be left to the choice of each fovereign for his own dominions. After this, he gave them a second answer more full and fatisfactory; but, upon the fall of Anne Boleyn, this negotiation proved abortive. On the one hand, the king grew cold, when he perceived that the confederates could no longer be of fervice to him in supporting the validity of his marriage; and, on the other, the German princes were sensible that they could never succeed with Henry, unless they would allow him an absolute dictatorship in matters of religion.

CENT. XVI.

4...

s the time is likely in the team tight. Was comestes in the ame innues a committee die finidenominal and it the enterior.

To see 1 711. In this tribled the in the many protomber, ests it remaciismen vire monoseit unit, alim THE THE THE WORLD COMdivided a Nurmor. If the cor the derveen the emperor and the immediate princes, on the ollowing conditions. Her the after thought fireand a mainte for marine in the war against the Inte and according Ferninana a lawful king if he domans, mu mut he enneme in his part, the distribute mis minu he elice it Arms and Jayloury, and allow the Lutherms the free and inmolected execute if their resignous disciring and titionnine, until a rue of mich thould be fixed, either is the first remember munici that was to be abancul in the diace of ix months, or in a dist al the empire. The more density of an approachare current was increase removed by this agreement, when him, seemer of Samme, Ged, and was historisted by his for John Frederic, a prince of invacible invited and magnitude, whole rega, towers, was link better than a commontal feet of dispositioners and culturities.

ور اردو درمورم

the religious truce, concluded at Narenhery, which with new vigour and refolution all the filer in of the reformation. It gave thrength " " in hime, and perference to the bold. Enthe contract of it, those who had been hitherto only because were described to the Roman pontiff, now spurned his year publicly, and refused to submit to his imperio a juristicion. This appears from the vaabout this time, boldly enlisted themselves under the religious standard of Luther. On the other hand, as all hopes of terminating the religious debates that divided Europe were founded in the meeting of a general and independent council, fo folemnly promifed, Charles renewed his earnest request to Clement, that he would hasten an event that was expected and defired with fo much impatience. The pontiff, whom the history of past councils filled with the most uneasy and discouraging apprehensions, endeavoured to retard what he could not, with any decency, abfolutely refuse [i]. He formed innumerable pretexts to put off the evil day; and his whole conduct evidently shewed, that he was more desirous of having these religious differences decided by the force of arms, than by the power of argument. He indeed, in the year 1533, made a propofal, by his legate, to assemble a council at Mantua, Placentia, or Bologna; but the protestants refused their consent to the nomination of an Italian council, and infifted, that a controversy, which had its rise in the heart of Germany, should be decided within the limits of the empire. The pope, by his usual artifices, eluded his own promise, disappointed their expectations, and was cut off by death, in the year 1534, in the midst of his stratagems  $\lceil k \rceil$ .

CENT.

IX. His successor Paul III. seemed to shew less reluctance to the convocation of a general council, and even appeared disposed to comply with the desire of the emperor in that respect. Accordingly, in the year 1535, he expressed his inclination to convoke one at Mantua; and, in the a general council, another reason engaged Clement to avoid an assembly of that nature; for, being conscious of the illegitimacy of his birth, as Father Paul observes, he had ground to fear that the Colonnas, or his other enemies, might plead this circumstance before the council, as a reason for his exclusion from the pontificate; since it might be well questioned whether a bastard could be a pope, though it is known, from many instances, that a prossign are may.

<sup>[1]</sup> See an ample account of every thing relative to this council in Father Paul's History of the council of Trent, book I.

CHAN MAI POST D fullawing rear. Te actually tent circular letters for that purpose through all the kingdoms and flates under als juridiction. The processors, on the other hand, fully perhaded, that, in fuch a council in, all mines would be carried by the versies et Rime, and acraing concluded but what ficuld be agreeable to the femineurs and ambision of the pontiff, insembled at Smaland in the year 1557. And there they protested folerally against nich a partial and corrupt council as that which was convoked by Paul, but, at the fame time, and a new funmary of their doctrine drawn up by Luther, in order to pretent it to the afsembled bishops, if it should be required of them. This firmmary, which was dringuished by the title of the Articles of Southerit, is generally joined with the creeds and contellions of the Lutheran chi.ch

Consumers committed by the Anslagida. I. During these transactions, two remarkable events happened, of which the one was most detrimental to the cause of religion in general, to that of the Reformation in particular, and produced, in Germany, civil tumuits and commotions of the most horrid kind: while the other was more salutary in its consequences and effects, and struck at the very root of the papal authority and dominion. The former event was a new

This council was summoned by Paul III. to affemble at Mantua, on the 23d of May, 1537, by a bull issued out the 2d of June in the preceding year. Several obstacles prevented its meeting. Frederic, duke of Mantua, was not much inclined to receive at once so many guests, some of whom might be very turbulent, into the place of his residence.

[m] That is, in a council affembled by the authority of the pope alone, and that also in Italy; two circumstances that must have greatly contributed to give Paul an undue insuence in that assembly. The protestants maintained, that the emperor and the other Christian princes of Europe had a right to be authoritatively concerned in calling a general council; so much the more, as the pontist was evidently one of the parties in the present debate.

fedition,

fedition, excited by a fanatical and outrageous comob of the anabaptists; and the latter, the rupture between Henry VIII. king of England, and the Roman pontiff, whose jurisdiction and spiritual supremacy were publicly renounced by that rough and resolute monarch.

CENT. XVI.

In the year 1533, there came to Munster, a city in Westphalia, a certain number of anabaptists, who surpassed the rest of that fanatical tribe in the extravagance of their proceedings, the phrenfy of their disordered brains, and the madness of their pretensions and projects. They gave themselves out for the messengers of heaven, invested with a divine commission to lay the foundations of a new government, a holy and spiritual empire, and to destroy and overturn all temporal rule and authority, all human and political institutions. Having turned all things into confusion and uproar at Munster by this seditious and extravagant declaration, they began to erect a new republic [n], conformable to their abfurd and chimerical notions of religion, and committed the administration of it to John Bockholt, a taylor by profession, and a native of Leyden. Their reign, however, was of a short duration; for, in the year 1535, the city was belieged, and taken by the bishop of Munster, assisted by other German princes; this fanatical king and his wrong-headed affociates were put to death in the most terrible and ignominious manner, and the new hierarchy destroyed with its furious and extravagant founders. This outrageous conduct of a handful of anabaptists drew upon the whole body heavy marks of displeasure from the greatest part of the European princes. The severest laws were enacted against them for the second time, in consequence of which

[n] This fanatical establishment they distinguished by the title of the New Jerusalem.

CENT. XVI.

Great Britain renounces the spiritual jurisdiction and supremacy of the pope.

the innocent and the guilty were involved in the same terrible fate, and prodigious numbers were devoted to death in the most dreadful forms [0].

XI. The pillars of papal despotism were at this time shaken in England, by an event, which, at first, did not seem to promise such important consequences. Henry VIII. a prince who, in vices and in abilities, was furpassed by none who swayed the sceptre in this age, and who, in the beginning of these religious troubles, had opposed the doctrine and views of Luther with the utmost vehemence, was the principal agent in this great revolution [p]. Bound in the chains of matrimony to Catharine of Arragon, aunt to Charles V. but, at the same time, captivated by the charms of an illustrious virgin, whose name was Anne Boleyn, he ardently defired to be divorced from the former, that he might render lawful his passion for the latter  $\lceil q \rceil$ . For this purpose, he addressed himself

[o] Hermanni Hamelmanni Historia Eccles. renati Evangelis per inferiorem Saxoniam et Westphal. part II. p. 1196. op.—De Printz Specimen Historia Anabapt. c. x, xi, xii.

This fect was, in process of time, considerably reformed by the ministry of two Friselanders, Ubbo and Mennon, who purified it from the enthusiastic, seditious, and atrocious principles of its first sounders, as will be seen in the progress of this history.

by historians of Henry VIII. there is not one that equals the-masterly one drawn by Mr. Hume. This great painter, whose colouring, in other subjects, is sometimes more artful than accurate, has caught from nature the striking lines of Henry's motley character, and thrown them into a composition, in which they appear with the greatest truth, set out with all the powers of expression.

[q] From Dr. Mosheim's manner of expressing himself, an uninformed reader might be led to conclude, that the charms of Anne Boleyn were the only motive that engaged Henry to dissolve his marriage with Catharine. But this representation of the matter is not accurate. The king had entertained scruples concerning the legitimacy of that marriage, before his acquaintance with the beautiful and unfortunate Anne. Conversant himself to pope Clement VII. in order to ob- CENT tain a diffolution of his marriage with Catharine, alleging, that a principle of religion restrained him from enjoying any longer the sweets of connubial love with that princess, as she had been previously married to his elder brother Arthur, and, as it was repugnant to the divine law to contract wedlock with a brother's widow. Clement was greatly perplexed upon this occasion, by the apprehension of incurring the indignation of the emperor, if his decision should be favorable to Henry; and therefore he contrived various pretexts to evade a positive answer, and exhausted all his policy and artifice to cajole and deceive the English monarch. Tired with the pretexts, apologies, vain promifes, and tardy proceedings of the pontiff, Henry had recourse, for the accomplishment of his purposes, to an expedient which was suggested by the famous Thomas Cranmer, who was a fecret friend to Luther and his cause, and who was afterwards raised to the see of Canterbury. This expedient was, to demand the opinions of the most learned European universities concerning the subject of his scruples. The result of this measure was favourable to his views. The greatest part of the universities de-verlant in the writings of Thomas Aquinas and other schoolmen, who looked upon the Levitical law as of moral and permanent obligation, and attentive to the remonstrances of the bishops, who declared his marriage unlawful, the king was filled with anxious doubts that had made him break off all conjugal commerce with the queen, before his affections had been engaged by any other. This appears by cardinal Wolfey's propofing a marriage between his majesty and the sister of Francis I. which that pliant courtier would never have done, had he known that the king's affections were otherwise engaged. After all, it is very possible, that the age and infirmities of Catharine, together with the blooming charms of Anne Boleyn, tended much to animate Henry's remorfe, and to render his conscience more See Burnet's History of the Reformation, and scrupulous. Hume's History of Great Britain,

clared

there is mirror with a minimum to the MANAGE WE CORNECTED AND CONTROL Allie W. Conlinged D. Lorder Browns and 1994 In BUILDING TO SERVINGE IN Thented. In the United Desire with their The "venture of family to be the respondence the ANTAURANCE BAL SUPPERMET C II INDEPENDED TO BE U. AND THE THE THE KINT WE BECKER IF THE paluation an importante de la lance of in the control of the property of the second THE ME THE THEFTHE STORE I CORE THE post in the name, and anthem to the post were any other and emiles overtimes.

and with a section . L -

DODE TO were the figure livering o in the month I Depleted was no productive to much person. the transfer of the case of the Residence there is the east momental win has a re-· user waterstand realists and the Comme of figure ver intermitation remained in greatest mad of M. error. Will il imperior for benefiting aper. In the tell achieves to excess to the month LOUBTON COSTER O TODEN. AND TREMENTA presented the terror of term of those was sifielet iron nun a aler telepon terminent. Le has be commerce the the to hear of the In-Tall James & : I manuscried it has the sainnear home, while the their clauser and unexp thursel in the forman pomitic and in some quein o lu mierorennos or de me de miese upan unuel a naine n' ne reignous temment in beine to ful ain accurate account of the and other the period every the new is minuted with Interest and na state i la kajurunia o in mora e Inguna. In Colons recom wil in well in minimit the records if this turbinden ternitum n Wilkent Leni. Aigen Irranna # · love that will it is the same structures Figire ques Friday & Williams will I to the Little on a ter action being.

of his subjects, and as authorized to prescribe CENT.

modes of faith according to his fancy. Hence it came to pass, that, during the life and reign of this prince, the face of religion was constantly changing, and thus refembled the capricious and unsteady character of its new chief. The prudence, learning, and activity of Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury, who was the favourite of the king, and the friend of the Reformation, counteracted, however, in many instances, the humour and vehemence of this inconstant and turbulent monarch. The pious productions and wife counsels of that venerable prelate diminished daily the influence of the ancient superstitions, dispelled by degrees the mists of ignorance that blinded the people in favour of popery, and considerably increased the number of those who wished well to the Reformation [s].

XIII. After the meeting of the council of A new pro-Mantua was prevented, various measures were feation. taken, and many schemes proposed, by the emperor on the one hand, and the protestant princes on the other, for the restoration of concord and union, both civil and religious. But these meafures and projects were unattended with any folid or falutary fruit, and were generally disconcerted by the intrigues and artifice of Rome, whose legates and creatures were always lying in wait to blow the flame of discord in all those councils that seemed unfavourable to the ambition of its pontiffs. In the year 1541, the emperor, regardless of the bishop of Rome, appointed a conference at Worms, Conference on the subject of religion, between persons of at Worms. piety and learning chosen from each party. It was here that Melancthon and Eckius disputed for three

[s] Besides Burnet's History of the Reformation, see Neal's History of the Puritans, vol. i. chap. i. p. 11.

CENT. days [1]. This conference was, for certain reasons, removed to the diet which was holden at Ratifbon in the same year, and in which the principal subject Der de Ra. of deliberation was a memorial, preiented by a perion unknown, containing a project of peace, with the terms of accommodation that were proper to terminate these religious differences [u]. This conference, however, produced no other effect, than a munual agreement of the contending parties to refer the decision of their pretensions and debates to a general council; or, if the meeting of such a council should be prevented by any unforeseen obitacles, to the next German diet.

All things tend to an open rup-

XIV. This resolution was rendered ineffectual by the period of perplexity and trouble that fucceeded the diet of Ratifban, and by various incidents that widened the breach, and delayed the deliberations which were defigned to heal it. It is true, the Roman pontiff ordered his legate to declare in the diet, which was affembled at Spire in the year 1542, that he would, according to the promise he had already made, assemble a general council, and that Trent should be the place of its meeting, if the diet had no objection to that city. Ferdinand, king of the Romans, and the princes who adhered to the papal cause, gave their consent to this proposal; while the protestant members of the diet objected both to a council summoned by the papal authority alone, and also to the place appointed for its meeting, and demanded a free and lawful council, which should not be biassed by the dictates, or awed by the proximity of the pontiff. This protestation produced no effect; Paul perfisted in his purpose, and issued his circular

[u] See Jo. Erdmann Bieckii Triplex Interim, cap. i.

letters

<sup>[1]</sup> See Jo. And. Rocderi Libellus de Colloquio Wormatienfi, Norimb. 1744, in 4to.

letters for the convocation of the council [w], with the approbation of the emperor; while this prince endeavoured, at the diet of Worms, in the year 1545, to persuade the protestants to consent to the meeting of this council at Trent. But

CENT. XVL SECT. 1.

[w] It is proper to observe here, that having summoned successively a council at Martua, Vicenza, and Venice, without any effect (for the council did not meet), this pontiff thought it necessary to shew the protestants that he was not averse to every kind of reformation; and therefore appointed four cardinals, and five other persons eminent for their learning, to draw up a plan for the reformation of the church in general, and of the church of Rome in particular, well knowing, by the spirit which reigned in the conclave, that the project would come to nothing. A plan, however, was drawn up by the persons appointed for that purpole. The reformation proposed in this plan was indeed extremely superficial and partial; yet it contained some particulars, which fearcely could have been expeded from the pens of those who composed it. They complained, for instance, of the ; vide and ignorance of the bishops, and proposed that none should receive orders but learned and pious men; and, that, therefore, care should be taken to have proper masters to in ruct the youth. They condemned translations from one benefice to another, grants of refervation, non-residence, and pluralities. They proposed that some convents should be abolished; that the liberty of the press should be restrained and limited; that the colloquies of Erasmus should be suppressed; that no ecclesiastic should enjoy a benefice out of his own country; that no cardinal should have a bishopric; that the questors of St. Anthony, and several other saints, should be abolished; and (which was the best of all their proposals) that the effects and personal estate of ecclesiastics should be given to the poor. They concluded with complaining of the prodigious number of indigent and ragged priests that frequented St. Peter's church; and declared, that it was a great scandal to see the prostitutes lodged so magnificently at Rome, and riding through the streets on fine mules, while the cardinals and other ecclefialtics accompanied them in a most courteous and familiar manner. The several articles of this plan of reformation (which Luther and Sturmius of Strasburg turned into ridicule, and which indeed left unredressed the most intobrable grievances of which the protestants complained) were published at Antwerp in or about the year 1539, with the answer of Cochlaus to the objections of Sturmius. likewise prefixed to the History of the Council of Trent, by Crabre, and were afterwards published at Paris in 1612.

they

cent. they were fixed in their resolution, and the efforts of Charles were vain; upon which the emperor, who had hitherto disapproved the violent measures which were incessantly suggested by the court of Rome, departed from his usual prudence and moderation, and, listening to the sanguinary counsels of Paul, formed, in conjunction with that subtle pontiff, the design of terminating religious debates by the force of arms. The landgrave of Hesse, and the elector of Saxony, the chief protectors of the protestant cause, were no sooner informed of this, than they took the proper measures to prevent than they took the proper measures to prevent themselves from being surprised and overwhelmed by a superior force, and, accordingly, raised an army for their defence. While this terrible storm was rifing, Luther, whose aversion to all violence in matters of religion was well known, and who recommended prayer and patience as the only arms worthy of those who had the cause of genuine Christianity at heart, was removed by Providence from this scene of tumult, and from the calamities that threatened his country. He died in peace, on the 18th of February, 1546, at Eisleben, the place of his birth.

CHAP. IV.

The History of the Reformation, from the commencement of the War of Smalcald, to the famous Pacification, commonly called the Peace of Religion, concluded at Augsburg.

The commencement of the war

CHARLES and the pontiff had determined upon the destruction of all who should of Smelcald. dare to oppose the council of Trent. The meeting of that affembly was to serve as a signal for their taking taking arms; and accordingly, its delibera- CENT. tions were scarcely begun, in the year 1546, XVI. when the protestants perceived undoubted marks of the approaching storm, and of a formidable union of their chief adversaries to overwhelm and crush them by a sudden blow. There had been, it is true, a new conference this very year, at the diet of Ratisbon, between some eminent doctors of both parties, with a view to the accommodation of their religious differences; but it appeared sufficiently, both from the nature of this dispute, the manner in which it was carried on, and its issue and result, that the matters in debate would sooner or later be decided in the field of battle. In the mean time, the fathers, assembled in the council of Trent, promulgated their decrees: while the protestant princes in the diet of Ratisbon protested against their authority, and were, in consequence of this conduct, proscribed by the emperor, who raised an army to reduce them to obedience.

II. The elector of Saxony and the landgrave of The affairs Hesse led their forces into Bavaria against the em- of the properor, and cannonaded his camp at Ingolftadt with an unfavourgreat spirit. It was supposed that this would able turn. bring the two armies to a general action; but several circumstances prevented a battle, which was expected by most of the confederates, and, probably, would have been advantageous to their cause. Among these we may reckon, principally, the persidy of Maurice, duke of Saxony, who, seduced by the promises of the emperor on the one hand, and by his own ambition and avarice on the other, invaded the electoral dominions of his uncle John Frederic, while that worthy prince was maintaining against the emperor the facred cause of religion and liberty. Add to this the divisions that were fomented by the dissimulation of the emperor among the confederate princes, the failure of France in furnishing the subsidy that had been promifed by its monarch, and some incidents of less moment. All these things so discouraged the heads of the protestant party, that their troops were soon dispersed, and the elector of Suxony directed his march homewards. he was purfued by the emperor, who made feveral forced marches, with a view to destroy his enemy, before he should have time to recover his vigour; in which design he was assisted by the ill-grounded security of the elector, and, as there is too much reason to think, by the treachery of his officers. The two armies drew up in order of battle near Mublberg on the Elbc, on the 24th of April, 1547, and, after a bloody action, that of the elector, being inferior in number, was entirely defeated, and himself taken prisoner. Philip, landgrave of Hesse, the other chief of the protestants, was perfuaded by the entreaties of his fonin-law, Maurice, now declared elector of Saxony [x], to throw himself upon the mercy of the emperor, and to implore his pardon. To this he consented, relying on the promise of Charles for obtaining forgiveness, and being restored to liberty; but, notwithstanding these expectations, he was unjustly detained prisoner by a scandalous violation of the most solemn convention. It is said, that the emperor retracted his promise, and deluded this unhappy prince by the ambiguity of two German words, which refemble each other [y]; but this mean, perisdious, and despotic behaviour as that of the emperor to the landgrave in the case now before us. After having received in public the humble submissions of that unhappy prince, made upon his knees, in the most respectful and affecting terms, and after having set him at liberty by a solemn treaty, he ordered him to be again arrested, without alleging any reason, or even any pretext, and kept him for several years in a close and severe confinement. When Maurice remountrated this point of history has not been hitherto so far cleared up, as to enable us to judge with certainty of the confinement of this prince, and the real causes to which it may be ascribed [z].

CENT. XVI.

[x] In the room of John Frederic, whom he had so

basely betrayed.

III. This revolution seemed to threaten ruin to The famous the protestant cause, and to crown the efforts of temporary edict, called the Roman pontiff with the most triumphant suc- the Interior. cess. In the diet of Augsburg, which was assembled foon after, with an imperial army at hand to promote union and dispatch, the emperor required of the protestants, that they would leave the decision of these religious contests to the wisdom of the council that was to meet at Trent. The greatest part of the members confented to this propofal; and among others, Maurice, the new elector of Saxony, who owed both his electorate and his dominions to the emperor, and who was ardently desirous of obtaining the liberty of his father-in-law the landgrave of Hesse. This general submission to the will of Charles, did not, however, produce the fruits that were expected from fuch a folemn, and almost universal approbation of the council of Trent. A plague, which manifested itself, or was faid to do so, in that city, engaged the greatest part of the assembled fathers to retire to Bologna, and thereby the council was, in effect, disfolved; nor could all the entreaties and remonstrances of the emperor prevail upon the pope to re-affemble it strated to the emperor against this new imprisonment, Charles answered, that he had never promised that the landgrave should not be imprisoned anew, but only that he should be exempted from perpetual imprisonment; and, to support this affertion, : he produced the treaty, in which his ministers, in order to chide the true meaning of the accommodation, had perfidiously foiked in ewiger gefangnis, which signifies a perpetual prison, inkead of einiger gefangnis, which means any prison. point, however, is contested by some historians.

[x] See a German work entitled, Benj. Grosch Vertheidigung der Evangelischen Kirche gegen Gottfr. Arnold. p. 29.

without

CENT. XVI. without delay. While affairs were in this fituation, and the prospect of seeing a council assembled was obscured, the emperor judged it necessary, during this interval, to fall upon some method of maintaining peace in religious matters, until the decision, so long expected, should be sinally obtained. It was with this view that he ordered Julius Pflugius, bishop of Naumburg, Michael Sidonius, a creature of the pontiss, and John Agricola, a native of Eisleben, to draw up a Formulary, which might serve as a rule of faith and worship to both parties, until a council should be summoned. As this was only a temporary appointment, and had not the force of a permanent or perpetual institution, the rule in question was called the Interim [a].

IV. This

This project of Charles was formed, partly to vent his refentment against the pope, and partly to answer other purposes of a more political kind. Be that as it may, the Formula ad Interim, or temporary rule of faith and worship here mentioned, contained all the essential doctrines of the church of Rome, though considerably softened and mitigated by the moderate, prudent, and artful terms in which they were expressed; terms quite different from those that were employed, before and after this period, by the council of Trent. There was even an affected ambiguity in many expressions, which rendered them susceptible of different senses, applicable to the sentiments of both communions, and therefore disagreeable to both. The Interim was composed with that fraudulent, specious, and feducing dexterity, that in after-times appeared in the deceitful exposition of the Catholic faith, by M. Bossuet, bishop of Meaux; and it was almost equally rejected by the Protestants and Roman Catholics. The cup was allowed, by this imperial creed, to the protestants in the administration of the Lord's supper, and priests and clerks were permitted by it to enter into the married state. These grants were, however, accompanied with the two following conditions: "1. That every one should be at liberty to use the cup, or to abstain from it, and to choose a state of marriage, or a state of celibacy, as he should judge most fit or convenient: 2. That these grants should remain in force no longer than the happy period when a general council should terminate all religious differences." This second condition tended to produce the greatest disorder

1

IV. This temporary rule of faith and discipline, though it was extremely favourable to the interests and pretensions of the court of Rome, had yet the fate to which schemes of reconciliation are often The troubles exposed; it pleased neither party, but was equally this edicated offensive to the followers of Luther and to the Ro-gave rife. man pontiff. It was, however, promulgated with folemnity, by the emperor, at the diet of Aug sburg; and the elector of Mentz, without even deigning to ask the opinions of the assembled princes and states, rose with an air of authority, and, as if he had been commissioned to represent the whole diet, gave a formal and public approbation to this famous Interim. Thus were many princes of the empire, whose silence, though it proceeded from want of courage, was interpreted as the mark of a tacit consent, engaged against their will to receive this book as a body of ecclesiastical law. The greatest part of those, who had the resolution to dispute the authority of this imperial creed, were obliged to submit to it by the force of arms; and hence arose deplorable scenes of violence and bloodshed, which involved the empire in the greatest calamities. Maurice, elector of Saxony, who, for some time, had affected to be neutral, and neither declared himself for those who rejected, nor for those who had adopted the rule in question, affembled, in the year 1548, the Saxon nobility and clergy, with Melancthon at the head of the latter, and, in several conferences at Leipsic and other places, took counsel concerning what was to

CENT.

and confusion, in case the future council should think proper to enjoin celibacy on the clergy, and declare, as it did in effect, their marriage unchristian and unlawful.

[a] See Jo. Erdm. Bieck, Triplex Interim, published in 8vo. Leipsic, in the year 1721. - Luc. Osiander. Centuria XVI. Histor. Eccles. lib. ii. cap. lxviii. p. 425.—For an account of the authors and editions of the book called Interim, see Die Davische Biblioth. part V. p. 1. and part VI. p. 185.

;

CENT. XVI.

be done in this critical affair. The deliberations, on this occasion, were long and tedious, and their result was ambiguous; for Melancthon, whose opinion was respected as a law by the reformed doctors, fearing the emperor on the one hand, and attentive to the fentiments of his fovereign on the other, pronounced a fort of conciliatory sentence, which, he hoped, would be offensive to no party. He gave it as his opinion, that the whole of the book called Interim could not, by any means, be adopted by the friends of the Reformation; but he declared, at the same time, that he saw no reason, why this book might not be approved, adopted, and received, as an authoritative rule, in things that did not relate to the essential points of religion, in things that might be considered as accelsory or indifferent [b]. This decision, instead of pacifying matters, produced, on the contrary, new divisions, and formed a schism among the followers of Luther, of which farther mention will be made in the History of the Church established by that reformer. I shall only observe, that this schism placed the cause of the Reformation in the most perilous and critical circumstances, and might have contributed either to ruin it entirely, or to retard considerably its progress, had the pope and the emperer been dexterous enough to make the proper use of these divisions, and to seize the favourable occasion that was presented to them, of turning the force of the protestants against themfelves.

The project of a council at Trent

;

V. Amidst these contests Paul III. was obliged to quit this life in the year 1549, and was succeeded, in the following year, by Julius III., who, yielding [b] By things indifferent, Melancthon understood particularly the rites and ceremonies of the popish worship, which, superstitious as they were, that reformer, yielding to the softness and slexibility of his natural temper, treated with a singular and excessive indulgence upon this occasion.

CENT.

to the repeated and importunate folicitations of the emperor, consented to convoke a council at Trent. Accordingly, in the diet of Augsburg, which was again holden under the formidable artillery of an imperial army, Charles laid this matter before the states and princes of the empire. The greatest part of the princes gave their consent to the convocation of this council, to which also Maurice, elector of Saxony, submitted upon certain conditions [c]. The emperor then concluded the diet in the year 1551, desiring the assembled princes and states to prepare all things for the approaching council, and promising that he would use his most zealous endeavours to promote moderation and harmony, impartiality and charity, in the deliberations and transactions of that assembly. Upon the breaking up of the diet, the protestants took the steps they judged most prudent to prepare themfelves for what was to happen. The Saxons employed the pen of Melancthon, and the Wirtemberghers that of Brentius, to draw up confessions of their faith, that were to be laid before the new council. Besides the ambassadors of the duke of Wirtemberg, several doctors of that city repaired to Trent. The Saxon divines, with Melancthon at of the protestants of Saxony, which he had lost by his perfidious behaviour to the late elector John Frederic, his benefactor and friend) gave his consent to the re-establishing the council of Trent upon the following conditions:—1st, That the points of doctrine, which had been already decided there, should be examined and discussed anew: 2dly, That this examination should be made in presence of the protestant divines, or their deputies: 3dly, That the Saxon protestants should have a liberty of voting, as well as of deliberating, in the council: And, 4thly, That the pope should not pretend to preside in that assembly, either in person or by his legates. This decharation of Maurice was read in the diet, and his deputies insisted upon its being entered into the registers, which the archbishop of Mentz, however, obstinately resused.

their

CENT. XVI. their head, set out also for that place, but proceeded in their journey no farther than Nuremberg. They had received secret orders to stop there; for Maurice had no intention of submitting to the emperor's views: on the contrary, he hoped to reduce that prince to a compliance with his own projects. He therefore yielded in appearance, that he might carry his point, and thus command in reality.

Maurice disconcerts the schemes of the emperor.

VI. The real views of Charles, amidst the divifions and troubles of Germany (which he fomented by negotiations that carried the outward aspect of a reconciling spirit), will appear evidently to such as consider attentively the nature of the times, and compare the transactions of this prince, the one with the other. Relying on the extent of his power, and the success that frequently accompanied his enterprizes, with a degree of confidence that was highly imprudent, Charles proposed to turn these religious commotions and dissensions to the confirmation and increase of his dominion in Germany, and, by sowing the seeds of discord among the princes of the empire, to weaken their power, and thereby the more easily to encroach upon their rights and privileges. On the other hand, ardently desirous of reducing within narrower limits the jurisdiction and dominion of the Roman pontiffs, that they might not set bounds to his ambition, or prevent the execution of his aspiring views, he flattered himself that this would be the natural effect of the approaching council. He was confirmed in this pleasing hope, by reflecting on what had happened in the councils of Constance and of Basil, in which the lust of papal ambition had been opposed with spirit, and restrained within certain limits. He also persuaded himself, that, by the dexterity of his agents, and the number of the Spanish and German bishops that were devoted to his interests, he should be able to influence and direct direct the deliberations of the approaching council in fuch a manner, as to make its decisions answer his expectations, and contribute effectually to the accomplishment of his views. Such were the specious dreams of ambition that silled the imagination of this restless prince; but his views and projects were disconcerted by that same Maurice of Saxony, who had been one of the principal instruments of that violence and oppression which he had exercifed against the protestant princes, and of the injury he had done to the protestant cause.

Germany, but even of all Europe, had, for a long between the time, addressed to the emperor their united entreaties emperor and for the deliverance of Philip, landgrave of Hesse, Sexony. and John Frederick, elector of Saxony, from their confinement; and Maurice had solicited, with peculiar warmth and assiduity, the liberty of the former, who was his father-in-law. But all these solicitations produced no effect. Maurice, perceiving at length that he was duped by the emperor, and also convinced that this ambitious monarch was forming infidious designs upon the liberties of Germany, and the jurisdiction of its princes, entered, with the utmost secrecy and expedition, into an alliance with the king of France and several of the

German princes, for the maintenance of the rights and liberties of the empire. Encouraged by this respectable confederacy, the active Saxon led a powerful army against the emperor in the year 1552, with such astonishing valour and rapidity, that he surprised Charles at Inspruck, where he lay with a handful of troops in the utmost security, and without the least apprehension of danger. This unforeseen event alarmed and dejected the emperor to fuch a degree, that he was willing to make peace on almost any conditions; and consequently,

in a little time after this, he not only concluded,

CENT

VII. The most considerable princes, not only of A war at Passau, the famous treaty of Pacification with the CENT. XVI. the protestants [d], but also promised to assemble, within the space of six months, a diet, in which all the tumults and dissensions that had been occasioned by a diversity of sentiment in religious matters should be entirely removed. Thus did the same prince, who stands foremost in the list of those that oppressed the protestants, and reduced their affairs to extremities, restore their expiring hopes, support and render triumphant their desperate cause, and procure, for them, that bulwark of peace and of liberty which still remains. Maurice, however, did not live to see this happy issue of his glorious expedition; for he lost his life the year following, by a wound received at the battle of Siverhausen, while he was sighting against Albert of Brandenburg [e].

[d] As this treaty is confidered by the German protestants as the basis of their religious liberty, it will not be amis to insert here some of its principal articles. By the three first articles it was stipulated, that Maurice and the confederates should lay down their arms, and should lend their troops to Ferdinand to defend Germany against the Turks, and that the landgrave of Hiffe should be set at liberty. By the fourth it was agreed that the rule of faith, called Interim, should be considered as null and void; that the contending parties should enjoy the free and undisturbed exercise of their religion, until a diet should be assembled to determine amicably the present disputes (which diet was to-meet in the space of fix months); and that this religious liberty should continue always, if it should be found impossible to come to an uniformity in doctrine and worship. It was also resolved, that all those who had suffered banishment, or any other calamity, on account of their having been concerned in the league or war of Smalcalde, should be reinstated in their privileges, possessions, and employments; that the Imperial chamber at Spire should be open to the protessauts as well as to the catholics; and that there should be always a certain number of the Lutheran persuasion in that high court.

cation of Passau, to which he refused to subscribe, continued the war against the Roman catholics; and afterwards committed such ravages in the empire, that a consederacy was formed against him, at the head of which Maurice was placed.

VIII. The troubles of Germany, with several CENT. other incidents, rendered it impossible to assemble the diet, which the emperor had promised at the pacification of Passau, so soon as the period The diet of Augiburg, mentioned in the articles of that treaty. This and the famous diet met, however, at Augsburg, in the peace of year 1555, was opened by Ferdinand in name of the emperor, and terminated those deplorable scenes of bloodshed, desolation, and discord, that had so long afflicted both church and state, by that religious peace (as it is commonly called) which secured to the protestants the free exercise of their religion, and established this inestimable liberty upon the firmest foundations. For, after various debates, the following memorable acts were passed, on the 25th of September: that the protestants who followed the confession of Augsburg, should be for the future considered as entirely exempt from the jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff, and from the authority and superintendence of the bishops; that they were left at perfect liberty to enact laws for themselves, relating to their religious sentiments, discipline, and worship; that all the inhabitants of the German empire should be allowed to judge for themselves in religious matters, and to join themselves to that church whose doctrine and worship they thought the purest, and the most consonant to the spirit of true Christianity; and that all those who should injure or persecute any person under religious pretexts, and on account of opinions and belief, should be declared and proceeded against as public enemies of the empire, invaders of its liberty, and disturbers of its peace [f]. The difficulties that were to be furmounted before this equitable decision could be procured, the tedious deliberations,

[f] Jo. Schilteri Liber de Pace Religiosa, 4to. 1700.— Christ. Lehmanni Alla Publica et originalia de Pace Religiosa, Francos. 1707.

the

CENT. the warm debates, the violent animofities, and bloody wars, that were necessary to engage the greatest part of the German states to consent to conditions so agreeable to the dictates of right reason, as well as to the sacred injunctions of the gospel, shew us, in a shocking and glaring point of light, the ignorance and superstition of these miserable times, and stand upon record, as one of the most evident proofs of the necessity of religious reform.

The Reformation gains ground in England.

IX. During these transactions in Germany, the friends of genuine Christianity in England deplored the gloomy reign of superstition, and the almost total extinction of true religion; and, seeing before their eyes the cause of popery maintained by the terrors of bloody perfecution, and daily victims brought to the stake, to expiate the pretended crime of preferring the dictates of the gospel to the despotic laws of Rome, they esteemed the Germans happy, in having thrown off the yoke of an imperious and fuperstitious church. Henry VIII. whose personal vices, as well as his arbitrary and capricious conduct, had greatly retarded the progress of the Reformation, was now no more. He departed this life in the year 1547, and was succeeded by his only fon Edward VI. This amiable prince, whose early youth was crowned with that wisdom, sagacity, and virtue, that would have done honour to advanced years, gave new spirit and vigour to the protestant cause, and was its brightest ornament, as well as its most essectual support. He encouraged learned and pious men of foreign countries to settle in England, and addressed a particular invitation to Martin Bucer and Paul Fagius, whose moderation added a lustre to their other virtues, that, by the ministry and labours of these eminent men, in concert with those of the friends of the reformation in England, he might purge his dominions from the vile fictions of popery, and establish the pure doctrines of Christianity in their place. For this purpose he issued the wifest orders for the restoration of true religion; but his reign was too short to accomplish fully such a glorious purpose. In the year 1553, he was taken from his loving and afflicted subjects, whose forrow was inexpressible, and suited to their loss. His sister Mary (the daughter of Catharine of Arragon, from whom Henry had been separated by the famous divorce), a furious bigot to the church of Rome, and a princess whose natural character, like the spirit of her religion, was despotic and cruel, succeeded him on the English throne, and imposed anew the arbitrary laws and the tyrannical yoke of Rome upon her reluctant subjects. Nor were the methods she employed, in the cause of superstition, better than the cause itself, or tempered by any sentiments of equity or compassion. Barbarous tortures, and death in the most shocking forms, awaited those who opposed her will, or made the least stand against the restoration of popery. And, among many other victims, the learned and pious Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury, who had been one of the most illustrious instruments of the Reformation in England, fell a facrifice to her fury*. This odious scene of persecution was happily concluded in the year 1558, by the death of the queen, who left no issue ; and, as foon as her fuccessor, the lady Elizabeth, ascended the throne, all things assumed a new and a pleasing aspect. This illustrious princess, whose sentiments, counsels, and projects, breathed a spirit superior to the natural softness and delicacy of her fex, exerted this vigorous and manly spirit in the defence

* This prelate was the less entitled to compassion, as, when in power, he followed the execrable example of the Romanists, by committing to the slames, against the will of the young king, two supposed heretics, two unfortunate foreigners, whom, one would think, every humane Briton would have spared, and whose destruction nothing could justify. CONTIN.

CENT. XVI. SECT. 1. defence of oppressed conscience and expiring liberty, broke anew the despotic yoke of papal authority and superstition, and, delivering her people from the bondage of Rome, established that form of religious doctrine and ecclesiastical government which England still enjoys. This religious establishment differs, in some respects, from the plan formed by those whom Edward VI. had employed for promoting the cause of the reformation, and approaches nearer to the rites and discipline of former times; though it is widely different from, and in the most important points entirely opposite to, the principles of the Roman hierarchy.

In Scotland.

X. The feeds of the Reformation were very early fown in Scotland, by feveral noblemen of that nation, who had resided in Germany during the religious disputes that divided the empire. But the power of the Roman pontist, supported and seconded by inhuman laws and barbarous executions, choked, for many years, these tender seeds, and prevented their taking root. The first and most eminent opposer of the papal jurisdiction was John Knox, [g], a dis-

[g] It will not be improper to insert here the character of this famous Scotish reformer, as it is drawn by the spirited, accurate, and impartial pen of Dr. Robertson, in his History of Scotland, book VI. " Zeal, intrepidity, difinte-" restedues (says that incomparable writer) were virtues which " he possessed in an eminent degree. He was acquainted, too, " with the learning cultivated in that age; and excelled in that " species of cloquence which is calculated to rouse and to inst flame. His maxims, however, were often too severe, and "the impetuofity of his temper excessive. Rigid and uncom-" plying himself, he shewed no indulgence to the infirmities of "others. Regardless of the distinctions of rank and character, " he uttered his admonitions with an acrimony and vehemence, some apt to irritate than to reclaim. This often betraved 66 him into indecent and undutiful expressions with respect to 46 the queen's person and conduct. Those very qualities, how-" ever, which now render his character less amiable, fitted "him to be the instrument of providence for advancing the " reformation among a fierce people, and enabled him to face a disciple of Calvin, whose eloquence was persuasive, CENT. and whose fortitude was invincible [b]. This resolute reformer set out from Geneva for Scotland, in the year 1559, and, in a very short space of time, inspired the people, by his private exhortations and his public discourses, with such a violent aversion to the superstitions of .Rome, that the greatest part of the Scotish nation abandoned them entirely, and aimed at nothing less than the total extirpation of popery [i]. From this period to the prefent times, the doctrine, worship, and discipline that had been established at Geneva by the ministry of Calvin, have been maintained in Scotland with invincible obstinacy and zeal; and every attempt to introduce into that kingdom the rites and government of the church of England, has proved impotent and unfuccefsful  $\lceil k \rceil$ .

"dangers, and to furmount opposition, from which a person " of a more gentle spirit would have been apt to shrink back. "By an unwearied application to study and to business, as well "as by the frequency and fervour of his public discourses, he "had worn out a constitution naturally strong. During a "lingering illness, he discovered the utmost fortitude, and met " the approaches of death with a magnanimity inseparable from "his character. He was constantly employed in acts of devo-"tion, and comforted himself with those prospects of immor-" tality, which not only preferve good men from desponding, "but fill them with exultation in their last moments."

[b] The earl of Morton, who was present at his funeral, pronounced his eulogium in a few words, the more honourable for Knox, as they came from one whom he had often censured with peculiar severity: "There lies He who never feared the face of man."

[i] See Neal's History of the Puritans, vol. i. p. 165. 232.

569.—Calderwood's History of Scotland's Reformation, 1680,

XI. The

London, folio.—Georg. Buchanani Rerum Scoticar. Hift. lib. xvi.-Melvil's Memoirs, vol. i. p. 73.

The indignation of the people, which had been excited by the vices of the clergy, was foon transferred to their persons, and settled at last, by a transition not unusual, upon the offices they enjoyed; and thus the effects of the reformation extended, not only to the doctrine, but also to the government of the popish church. But in Germany, England, CENT. XVI. SECT. 1. In Ireland. XI. The cause of the Reformation underwent, in Ircland, the same vicissitudes and revolutions that and the northern kingdoms, its operations were checked by the power and policy of their princes, and epilcopal hierarchy (which appears to be the most conformable to the practice of the church, fince Christianity became the established religion of the Roman empire) was still continued in these countries, under certain limitations. The ecclesiastical government was in a great measure borrowed from the civil; and the dioceles and jurisdiction of patriarchs, archbishops, and bishops, corresponded with the division and constitution of the empire. Switzerland and the Low Countries, the nature and spirit of a republican policy gave fuller scope to the reformers; and thus all pre-eminence of order in the church was deftroyed, and that form of ecclefiastical government established, which has been fince called Presentation. The situation of the primitive church (appressed by continual persecutions, and obliged by its sufferings to be contented with a form of government extremely simple, and with a parity of rank for want of ambition to propose, or power to support a subordination) suggested, without doubt, the idea of this latter system; though it would be unfair to allege this confideration as a victorious argument in favour of Preforterianism; because a change of circumstances will sometimes justify a change in the methods and plans of government. Be that as it may, the church of Geneva, which received the decisions of Calvin with an amazing docility, reflored this prefeyterian or republican form of ecclefiaftical policy; Knox studied, admired, and recommended it to his countrymen, and he was seconded by many of the Scotish nobles, of whom some hated the persons, while others coveted the wealth of the digmied clergy. But, in introducing this system, that reformer did not deem it expedient to depart altogether from the ancient form; but, inflead of bishops, proposed the establishment of ten superintendants, to inspect the life and doctrine of the other clergy, and preside in the inferior judicatories of the church, without pretending to claim either a feat in parliament, or the revenues and dignity of the former bitheps. This proposal was drawn up, and presented to a convention of estates in the year 1561; and what it contained, in relation to ecclesiastical jurisdiction and discipline, would have easily obtained the fanction of that assembly, had not a delign to recover the patrimony of the church, in order to apply it to the advancement of religion and learning, been intinuated in it. After this, at certain periods, the name of bishop was revived, but without the prerogatives, jurisdiction, or revenues that were formerly appropriated to that order. They

that had attended it in England. When Henry CENT. VIII. after the abolition of the papal authority, XVI. was declared supreme head, upon earth, of the church of England, George Brown, a native of England, and a monk of the Augustine order, whom that monarch had created, in the year 1535, archbishop of Dublin, began to act with the utmost vigour in consequence of this change in the hierarchy. He purged the churches of his diocese from superstition in all its various forms, pulled down images, destroyed relics, abolished absurd and idolatrous rites, and by the influence, as well as authority he had in Ireland, caused the king's supremacy to be acknowledged by that nation [1]. Henry shewed soon after, that this supremacy was not a vain title; for he banished the monks out of that kingdom, confiscated their revenues, and fecularifed or suppressed their convents. In the reign of Edward VI. farther progress

They were made subject to the general assemblies of the clergy, and their power was gradually diminished, until their name and order were abolished at the revolution in 1688, when presbyte-rianism was established in Scotland by the laws of the state. See Robertson's History of Scotland.

The learned and pious primate Usher, in his memoirs of the ecclesiaftical affairs of Ireland, speaks of archbishop Brown in the following manner: "George Brown was a man of a chearful countenance, in his acts and deeds plain down-right; to the poor merciful and compassionate, pitying the state and condition of the fouls of the people, and advising them, when he was provincial of the Augustine order in England, to make their application solely to Christ; which advice coming to the ears of Henry VIII. he became a favourite, and was made archbishop of Dublin. Within five mars after he enjoyed that see, he caused all superstitious relics and images to be removed out of the two cathedrals in Dublin, and out of all the churches in his diocese; and caused the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed, to be placed in gilded frames about the altars. He was the first that turned from the Romish religion of the clergy here in Ireland, to embrace the reformation of the church of England." See a very curious pamphlet in the fifth volume of the Harleian Miscellany, p. 558. intitled, Historical Collections of the Church of Ireland, &c.

8

CENT. XVI. BECT. 1. was made in the removal of popilh superstitions, by the zealous labours of archbishop Brown, and the auspicious encouragement he granted to all who exerted themselves in the cause of the reformation. But the death of this excellent prince, and the accession of his sister to the throne, changed the face of things in Ireland, as it had done in England [m]. Mary pursued with fire and sword, and

[m] Here Dr. Mosheim has fallen into a mistake, by not distinguishing between the designs of the queen, which were indeed cruel, and their execution, which was happily and providentially prevented. This appears from a very singular and comical adventure, of which the account, as it has been copied from the papers of Richard, earl of Cork, and is to be found among the manuscripts of Sir James Ware, is as follows:

"Queen Mary having dealt severely with the protestants in " England, about the latter end of her reign figned a commis-" fion to take the same course with them in Ireland; and, to " execute the same with greater force, she nominates Dr. Cole " one of the commissioners. This doctor coming with the "commission to Chester on his journey, the mayor of that "city, hearing that her majesty was fending a messenger into " Ireland, and he being a churchman, waited on the doctor, who "in discourse with the mayor, taketh out of a cloak-bag a lea-"ther box, faying unto him, "Here is a commission that shall " lash the heretics of Ireland" (calling the protestants by that "title). The good woman of the house, being well affected "to the protestant religion, and also having a brother named "John Edmonds, of the same, then a citizen in Dublin, was " much troubled at the doctor's words; but watching her conve-" nient time, while the mayor took his leave, and the doctor com-" plimented him down the stairs, she opens the box, takes the " commission out, and places in lieu thereof a sheet of paper, " with a pack of cards wrapped up therein, the knave of clubs being placed uppermo The doctor coming up to his cham-" ber, suspecting nothing of what had been done, put up the box " as formerly. The next day, going to the water side, wind and " weather serving him, he sails towards Ireland, and landed on " the 7th of October, 1558, at Dublin. Then coming to the " castle, the lord Fitz-Walter, being lord-deputy, sent for him " to come before him and the privy council; who, coming in, " after he had made a speech relating upon what account he "came over, prefents the box unto the lord-deputy, who " causing it to be opened, that the secretary might read the

and all the marks of unrelenting vengeance, the CENT. promoters of a pure and rational religion, and deprived Brown and other protestant bishops of their dignities in the church. But the reign of Elizabeth gave a new and a deadly blow to popery, which was recovering its force, and arming itself anew with the authority of the throne; and the Irish were obliged again to submit to the form of worship and discipline established in England [n].

XII. The Reformation had not been long The Reforestablished in Britain, when the Belgic provinces, mation takes place united by a respectable confederacy, which still in the subsists, renounced their spiritual allegiance to the Provinces. Roman pontiff. Philip II. king of Spain, apprehending the danger to which the religion of Rome was exposed from that spirit of liberty and independence which reigned among the inhabitants of the Low Countries, took the most violent measures to difpel it. For this purpose he augmented the number of the bishops, enacted the most severe " commission, there was nothing save a pack of cards with the " knave of clubs uppermost; which not only startled the " lord-deputy and council, but the doctor, who assured them " he had a commission, but knew not how it was gone;" then the lord deputy made answer, Let us have another com-" mission, and we will shuffle the cards in the mean while." " The doctor being troubled in his mind, went away, and " returned into England; and coming to the court, obtained " another commission; but staying for a wind on the water-" fide, news came to him that the queen was dead; and thus " God preserved the protestants of Ireland."

Queen Elizabeth was so delighted with this story, which was related to her by lord Fitz-Walter on his return to England, that the fent for Elizabeth Fdmonds, and gave her a pention of forty pounds during her life. See Cox, Hibernia Anglicana, or History of Ireland, vol. ii. p. 308. — Harleian Miscellany, vol. v. p. 568.

[s] See the life of Dr. George Brown, Archbishop of Dublin, published at London in 4to, in the year 1681, and reprinted in the fifth volume of the Harleian Miscellany, No. LXXIII.

and

CENT. XVI.

and barbarous laws against all innovators in matters of religion, and erected that unjust and inhuman tribunal of the inquisition, which would intimidate and tame, as he thought, the manly spirit of an oppressed and persecuted people. But his measures, in this respect, were as unsuccessful as they were absurd; his furious and intemperate zeal for the superstitions of Rome accelerated their destruction; and the papal authority, which had only been in a critical state, was reduced to a desperate one, by the very steps that were designed to support it. The nobility formed themselves into an affociation, in the year 1566, with a view to procure the repeal of these tyrannical edicts; and, when their folicitations and requests were treated with contempt, they resolved to obtain by force, what they hoped to have gained from clemency and justice. They addressed themselves to a free and an abused people, spurned the authority of a cruel yoke, and with an impetuosity and vehemence that were perhaps excessive, trampled upon whatever was held sacred or respectable by the church of Rome [o]. To quell thefe

[o] Dr. Mosheim seems here to distinguish too little between the spirit of the nobility and that of the multitude. Nothing was more temperate and decent than the conduct of the former; and nothing could be more tumultuous and irregular than the behaviour of the latter. While the multitude destroyed churches, pulled down monasteries, broke the images used in public worship, abused the officers of the inquisition, and committed a thousand enormities, the effects of furious refentment and brutish rage; the nobility and opulent citizens kept within the bounds of moderation and prudence. Though justly exasperated against a despotic and cruel government, they dreaded the consequences of popular tumults as the greatest of misfortunes. Many of them even united their counsels and forces with those of the governess (the duchess of Parma), to restrain the seditious and turbulent spirit of the people. The prince of Orange and count Egmont (whole memories will live for ever in the grateful remembrance of the Dutch nation, and be dear to all the lovers of hereic patriotism these tumults, a powerful army was sent from Spain, under the command of the duke of Alva, whose horrid barbarity and sanguinary proceedings kindled that long and bloody war from which the powerful republic of the United Provinces derived its origin, confistence, and grandeur. It was the heroic conduct of William of Nassau, prince of Orange, seconded by the succours of England and France, that delivered this state from the Spanish yoke. And no fooner was this deliverance obtained, than the reformed religion, as it was professed in Switzerland, was established in the United Provinces [p]; and, at the same time, an universal toleration was granted to those whose religious sentiments were of a different nature, whether they retained the faith of Rome, or embraced the Reformation in another form [q], provided that they made no attempts against the authority of and facred liberty throughout 'the word) fignalized their moderation upon this occasion, and were the chief instruments of the repose that ensued. Their opposition to the government proceeded from the dictates of humanity and justice, and not from a spirit of licentiousness and rebellion; and their merit and respectability had secured to them such instruments and authority among the people, that, had the imperious court of Spain condescended to make any reasonable concessions, the public tranquillity might have been restored, and the affections of the people entirely regained. See Le Clerc, Histoire des Prov. Un. livr. i. p. 18.

CENT. XVI.

[p] In the year 1573.

that was granted to the Roman catholics, and that which the Anabaptists, Lutherans, and other protestant sects, enjoyed. They were all indiscriminately excluded from the civil employments of the state; but, though they were equally allowed the exercise of their religion, the latter were permitted to enjoy their religious worship in a more open and public manner than the former, from whom the churches were taken, and whose religious assemblies were confined to private conventicles, which had no external resemblance to the edifices usually set apart for divine worship.

the

CENT. the government, or the tranquillity of the pub- $lic_{T, T}$  lic [r].

The progress of the Reformation in Spain and Italy.

XIII. The Reformation made a confiderable progress in Spain and Italy, soon after the rupture between Luther and the Roman pontiff. In all the provinces of Italy, but more especially in the territories of Venice, Tuscany, and Naples, the religion of Rome lost ground, and great numbers of persons, of all ranks and orders, expressed an averfion to the papal yoke. This gave rife to violent and dangerous commotions in the kingdom of Naples in the year 1536, of which the principal authors were Bernard Ochino and Peter Martyr, who, in their public discourses from the pulpit, exhausted all the force of their irresistible eloquence in exposing the enormity of the reigning superstition. These tumults were appealed with much difficulty by the united efforts of Charles V. and his viceroy Don Pedro de Toledo[s]. In several places the popes put a stop to the progress of the Reformation, by letting loose, upon the pretended heretics, their bloody inquisitors, who spread the marks of their usual barbarity through the greatest part of Italy. These formidable ministers of superstition put such a number of supposed heretics to death, and perpetrated, on the friends of religious liberty, such horrid acts of cruelty and oppression, that most of the reformists consulted their safety by a voluntary exile, while others returned to the religion of Rome, at least in external appearance. But the terrors of the inquisition,

which

[r] See a farther account of this affair in Gerard Brandt's History of the Reformation in the Netherlands, of which there was a French abridgment published at Amsterdam, in three volumes 12mo, in the year 1730. The original work was published in Dutch, in four volumes 4to.

[s] See Giannone, Historia di Napoli, tom. iv-Vita Galeacii in Museo Helvetico, tom. ii. p. 524.

which frightened back into the profession of popery CENT. many protestants in other parts of Italy, could not penetrate into the kingdom of Naples; nor could either the authority or entreaties of the Roman pontiffs engage the Neapolitans to admit within their territories either a court of inquisition, or even viliting inquisitors  $\lceil t \rceil$ .

[1] It was an attempt to introduce a Roman inquisitor into the city of Naples, that, properly speaking, produced the tumult and sedition which Dr. Mosheim attributes in this fection to the pulpit discourses of Ochino and Martyr; for these famous preachers, particularly the former, taught the doctrines of the reformation with great art, prudence, and caution, and fecretly converted many, without giving public The emperor himself, who heard him at Naples, declared that "he preached with fuch spirit and devotion as " might almost make the very stones weep." After Ochino's departure from Naples, the disciples he had formed gave private instructions to others, among whom were some eminent ecclesiastics and persons of distinction, who began to sorm congregations and conventicles. This awakened the jealousy of the viceroy Toledo, who published a severe edict against heretical books, ordered some productions of Melancthon and Erasmus to be publicly burned, looked with a suspicious eye on all kinds of literature, suppressed several academies, which had been erected about this time by the nobility for the advancement of learning; and, having received orders from the emperor to introduce the inquisition, desired pope Paul III. to fend from Rome to Naples a deputy of that formidable tribunal. It was this that excited the people to take up arms in order to defend themselves against this branch of spiritual tyranny, which the Neapolitans never were patient enough to suffer, and which, on many occasions, they had opposed with vigour and success. Hostilities ensued, which were followed by an accommodation and a general pardon; while the emperor and viceroy, by this resolute opposition, were deterred from their delign of introducing this despotic tribunal into the kingdom of Naples. Several other attempts were afterwards made, during the reigns of Philip II, III, IV., and Charles II. to establish the inquisition in Naples; but, by the jealousy and vigilance of the people, they all proved ineffectual. At length the emperor Charles VI., early in the eighteenth century, published an edict, expressly prohibiting all causes, relating to the holy faith, from being tried by any persons except the archbishop and bishops as ordinaries. See Giannone, lib. xxxil. sect. 2. and 3.—Modern Univ. History, vol. xxviii. p. 273, &c. edit. octavo.

CENT. XVI. BECT. I.

The eyes of several persons in Spain were opened upon the truth, not only by the spirit of inquiry, which the controversies between Luther and Rome had excited in Europe, but even by the efforts of those divines whom Charles V. had brought with him into Germany, to combat the pretended berefy of the reformers. For these Spanish doctors imbibed this herefy instead of refuting it, and propagated it more or less, on their return home, as evidently appears from feveral circumstances [u]. But the inquisition, which could not gain any footing in the kingdom of Naples, reigned triumphant in Spain; and by racks, gibbets, stakes, and other formidable instruments of its method of perfuading, foon terrified the people back into popery, and suppressed the velicement desire they had of changing a superstitious worship for a rational religion  $\lceil w \rceil$ .

[u] This appears from the unhappy end of all the ecclesiastics who had attended Charles, and followed him into his retirement. No sooner was that monarch dead, than they were seised by order of the court of inquisition, and were afterwards committed to the flames, or fent to death in other forms. equally terrible. Such was the fate of Augustin Casal, the emperor's preacher; of Constantine Pontius, his confessor; of the learned Egidius, whom he had nominated to the bishoprio of Tortosa. of Bartholomew de Caranza, a Dominican, who had been confessor to king Philip and queen Mary, with above twenty more of less note. All this gave reason to pre ume that Charles died a protestant. Certain it is, that he knew well the corruptions and frauds of the church of Rome, and the grounds and reasons of the protestant faith; though business, ambition, interest, and the prejudices of education, may have blinded him for a while, until leifure, retirement, the absence of worldly temptations, and the approach of death, removed the veil, and led him to wife and ferious reflections. See Burnet's History of the Reformation, and the book cited in the following note.

[w] See Geddes' Spanish Protestant Martyrology, in his Miscellaneous trads, tom. i. p. 445.

XIV. I shall not enter into a contest with those writers, whatever their fecret intentions may be, who observe, that many unjustifiable proceedings may be imputed to some of the most eminent promoters of this great change in the state of religion. w form For every impartial and attentive observer of the rife and progress of the Reformation will ingemi-mation, and oully acknowlege, that wisdom and prudence did not always attend the transactions of those who it was prowere concerned in this glorious cause; that many things were done with violence, temerity, and precipitation; and, what is still worse, that several of the principal agents in this great revolution were actuated more by the impulse of passion and views of interest, than by a zeal for the advancement of true religion. But, on the other hand, the wife and candid observer of human affairs will own, as a most evident and incontestable truth, that many things which, when stripped of the circumstances and motives that attended them, appear to us, at this time, as real crimes, will be deprived of their enormity, and even acquire the aspect of noble deeds, if they be considered in one point of view with the times and places in which they were transacted, and with the frauds and crimes of the Roman pontiffs and their creatures, by which they were occasioned. But, after all, in defending the cause of the Reformation, we are under no obligation to defend, in every respect, the moral cha-Tacters of its promoters and instruments. These two objects are entirely distinct. The most just and excellent cause may be promoted with low views, and from finister motives, without losing its nature, or ceasing to be just and excellent.

The true state of the question is, whether the opposition of Luther and other reformers to the Roman pontiff arose from just and solid reasons; and this question is entirely independent of the virtues K 4

CENT. XVI. SECT. I., What judgment we are concerning the Reforthe means

CENT. XVI. SECT. I. virtues or vices of particular persons [x]. Let many of these individuals be supposed as odious as, or still more detestable than, they are represented by their adversaries, provided the cause which they supported be allowed to have been just and good.

[x] The translator has here added some paragraphs, to render more perspicuous the important observation of the learned author. And the Continuator takes the opportunity of remarking, as an excuse for the intemperance and vehemence of Luther, that the mildness of a Melancthon, and the timidity of an Erasmus, would never have produced the desired reformation.

SECTION II.

The General History of the Church.

I. THE Spaniards and Portuguese, if we may give credit to their historians, exerted themselves, with the greatest vigour and success, in the propagation of the gospel among the darken- of the ed nations [a]. And it must, indeed, be allowed, that they communicated fome notions, fuch as they were, of the Christian religion to the inhabitants of America, to those parts of Africa where they carried their arms, and to the islands and maritime provinces of Asia, which they reduced under their dominion. It is also true, that considerable numbers of these savage people, who had hitherto lived, either under the bondage of the most extravagant superstitions, or in a total ignorance of any object of religious worship, embraced, at least in outward appearance, the doctrines of the Gospel. But when we reflect on the methods of conversion that were employed by the Spanish missionaries among these wretched nations, on the barbarous laws and inhuman tortures that were wed to force them into the profession of Christianity; when it is considered, farther, that the denomination of a Christian was conferred upon [a] See Lasitau's Histoire des Decouvertes et Conquétes des Portugais dans le nouveau Monde, tome iii. p. 420. All the relations given by this eloquent writer (who was afterwards created bishop of Sisteron) are taken from the Portuguese historians.—The other writers who have thrown light upon this part of Ecclesiastical History, are enumerated by Fabricius, in his Lux Salutar. Evangelii toti orbi exoriens, çap. 42, 43, &c.

CENT. The borders church eplarged.

SECT. II.

CENT every poor wretch who discovered a blind and excellive veneration for his stupid instructors, and who could by certain gestures, and the repetition of a little jargon, perform a few superstitious rites and ceremonies; then, instead of rejoicing at, we shall be tempted to lament, such a propagation of the gospel, and to behold the labours of such miserable apostles with indignation and contempt. Such is the judgment passed upon these missionaries, not only by those whom the church of Rome placed in the list of beretics, but also by many of the most pious and eminent of her own doctors, in France, Germany, Spain, and Italy.

The zeal of the Roman pontiffs in the propegation of Christianity.

II. When the Roman pontiffs faw their ambition checked by the progress of the Reformation, which deprived them of a great part of their spiritual dominion in Europe, they turned their lordly views. towards the other parts of the globe, and became more solicitous than ever about the propagation of the gospel among the nations that were yet involved in the darkness of paganism. they considered as the best method of making amends for the loss they had sustained in Europe, and the most specious pretext for assuming to themselves, with some appearance of justice, the title of heads or parents of the universal church. The famous fociety, which, in the year 1540, took the denomination of Jesuits, or the Company of Jesus, seemed every way proper to affist the court of Rome in the execution of this extensive defign. And accordingly, from their first rife, this peculiar charge was given to them, that they should form a certain number of their order for the propagation of Christianity among the unenlightened nations, and that these missionaries should be at the absolute disposal of the pope, and always ready, at a moment's warning, to repair to whatever part of the world he should fix for the exercise of their ministry [b]. The many histories and relations which mention the labours, perils, and exploits of that prodigious multitude of Jesuits, who were employed in the conversion of the African, American, and Indian infidels, abundantly shew, with what fidelity and zeal the members of this fociety executed the orders of the successive pontiffs [c]. And their labours would have undoubtedly crowned them with immortal glory, had it not appeared evident, from the most authentic records, that the greatest part of these new apostles had more in view the promotion of the ambitious views of Rome, and the: advancement of the interests of their own society, than the propagation of the Christian religion, or the honour of its divine author [d]. It may also be

[b] When the fanatic Ignatius first solicited the confirmation of his order by pope Paul III. [the learned and . worthy cardinal Guidiccioni opposed his request with great vehemence. But this opposition was vanquished by the dexterity of Ignatius, who, changing the articles of his inflitution, in which he had promised obedience to the pope with certain restrictions, turned it in such a manner as to bind his order by a solemn vow of implicit, blind, and unlimited submission and, obedience to the Roman pontiss. This change produced the defired effect, and made the popes look uponthe Jesuits as the chief support of their authority. Hence arose the zeal which Rome has ever shewn for that order, and ' continues even at present to shew, when their secret enormities have been brought to light, and procured the suppression of. their fociety in Portugal and in France, where their power was so extensive. It is indeed remarkable, that Ignatius and his company, in the very same charter of their order in which they declare their implicit and blind allegiance to the court of Rome, promise a like implicit and unlimited allegiance to the general of their fociety, notwithstanding the impossibility of serving two absolute masters, whose commands may be often contradictory. See Histoire des Religieux de la Compagnie de

Jesus, printed at Utrecht in 1741, tome i. p. 77, &c. [c] See Jo. Alb. Fabricii Lux Evangelii toti orbi exoriens, cap. xxxii. p. 550.

[d] B. Christ. Eberh. Weismanni Oratio de virtutibus et vitus Mission. Romanar. in Orat. ejus Academ. p. 286.

affirmed,

CENT. affirmed, from records of the highest credit and authority, that the inquisition erected by the Jesuits at Goa, and the penal laws, whose terrors they employed to freely in propagation of the gospel, contributed much more than their arguments and exhortations, which were but sparingly used, to engage the Indians to embrace Christianity [e]. The converting zeal of the Franciscans and Dominicans, which had, for a long time, been not only cooled, but almost totally extinguished, was animated anew by the example of the Jesuits. And several other religious orders, that slumbered in their cells, were roused from their lethargy, if not by a principle of envy, at least by a spirit of emulation.

The propagation of the guipel in India, Japan, and China.

III. Of all the Jesuits who distinguished themfelves by their zealous and laborious attempts to extend the limits of the church, none acquired a more shining reputation than Francis Xavier, who is commonly called the Apostle of the Indies [f]. An undaunted resolution, and no fmall degree of genius and fagacity, rendered this famous missionary one of the most proper persons that could be employed in such an arduous task. Accordingly, in the year 1522, he set fail for the Portuguese settlements in India, and, in a short time, spread the knowledge of the Christian re-

[e] See the Hist. de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome ii. p. 171.

<sup>207.</sup> [f] The late king of Portugal obtained for Xavier, or rather for his memory, the title of Protector of the Indies, from Benedict XIV. in the year 1747. See the Lettres Edisiantes et Curieuses des Missions Etrangeres, tome xliii. Pref. p. 36. The body of this sainted missionary lies interred at Goa, where it is worshiped with the highest marks of devotion. There is also a magnificent church at Cotati dedicated to Xavier, to whom the inhabitants of that Portuguese settlement pay the most devout tribute of veneration and worship. See Lettres Edifiantes, &c. tome iii. p. 83. 203. tome v. p. 38-4". tome vi. p. 78.

CENT

• ligion, or, to speak more properly, of the Romish system, over a great part of the continent, and in several of the islands of that remote region. Thence, in the year 1529, he passed into Japan, and laid there, with amazing rapidity, the foundations of the famous church, which flourished during so many years in that vast empire. indefatigable zeal prompted him to attempt the conversion of the Chinese; and with this view he embarked for that extensive and powerful kingdom, in fight of which he ended his days in the year 1552 [g]. After his death, other members of his infinuating order penetrated into China. Of these missionaries the chief was Matthew Ricci, an Italian, who, by his skill in the mathematics, became so acceptable to the Chinese nobility, and even to their emperor, that he obtained, both for himself and his affociates, the liberty of explaining to the people the doctrines of the gofpel  $\lceil b \rceil$ . He may, therefore, be considered as the parent and founder of the Christian churches, which, though often dispersed, and tossed to and fro by the storms of persecution, still subsist in China [i].

IV. The jurisdiction and territories of those The atprinces, who first threw off the papal yoke, being confined within the limits of Europe, the churches and towards that were under their protection could contribute tempts of the Protestthe propagation of the gospel in foreign parts.

[g] See the writers enumerated by Fabricius, in his Lux Evangelii, &c. cap. xxxix. p. 677. Add to these Lasitau's Histoire des Decouvertes des Portugais dans le nouveau Monde, tome iii. p. 419. 424. tome iv. p. 63. 102.—Histoire de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome i. p. 92.

[b] J. B. Du Halde, Description de l'Empire de la Chine.

tome iii. p. 84. edit. Holland.

[i] It appears however, that before the arrival of Ricci in China, some of the Dominicans had already been there, though to little purpose. See Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, tome iii. P. 1354-

but

CENT. XVI. SECT. II.

but little to the propagation of the gospel in t distant regions of which we have been speak It is, however, recorded in history, that, in year 1556, fourteen protestant missionaries v fent from Geneva to convert the Americans though it is not well known who was the prom of this pious design, or with what success it carried into execution. The English also, v towards the conclusion of this century, parts colonies into the northern of Amei transplanted with them the reformed relig which they themselves professed; and, as it possessions were extended and multiplied from t to time, their religion also made a consider. progress among that rough and uncivilized pec We learn, moreover, that about this time Swedes exerted their religious zeal in conver to Christianity many of the inhabitants of land and Lapland, of whom a considerable n ber had hitherto retained the impious and ex vagant superstitions of their pagan ancestors.

The enemies of Christi-

V. It does not appear, from authentic reco that the fword of perfecution was drawn aga the gospel, or any public opposition made to progress of Christianity, during this cents. And it would betray a great ignorance, both the situation, opinions, and maxims of the Turto imagine, that the war they waged against Christians was carried on upon religious princip or with a view to maintain and promote the ctrines of Mohammed. On the other hand, certain, that there lay concealed, in different p

[k] Picteti Oratio de Trophais Christi, in Orat. ejus, p. There is no doubt that the doctors here mentioned were t whom the illustrious admiral Coligni invited into Frawhen, in the year 1555, he had formed the project of sendi colony of Protestants into Brasil and other provinces of Arica. See Charlevoix, Histoire de la Nouvelle France, tor p. 22.

CENT.

of Europe, not a few persons who entertained a virulent enmity against religion in general, and, in a more especial manner, against the religion of the gospel; and who, both in their writings and in private conversation, sowed the seeds of impiety and error, and instilled their odious principles into weak, unsteady, and credulous minds. this pernicious and unhappy class are generally placed some of the Peripatetic philosophers, who adorned Italy, by their erudition, and particularly Pomponatius; feveral French wits and philosophers, such as Bodin, Rabelais, Montagne, Bonaventure des Perieres, Dolet, Charron; some Italians, at whose head appears Leo X. followed by Bembo, Politian, Jordano Bruno, Ochino; and a few Germans, such as Theophrastus Paracelsus, Nicholas Taurellus, and others [1]. It is even reported, that, in certain provinces of France and Italy, schools were erected, whence whole swarms of these impious doctors soon issued to deceive the simple and unwary. This accusation will not be wholly rejected by fuch as are acquainted with the spirit and genius of these times; nor can it be faid with truth, that all the persons charged with this heary reproach were entirely guiltless. It is nevertheless certain, on the other hand, that, upon an accurate and impartial examination of this matter, the accusation brought against many of them will appear to be entirely groundless; and that, with respect to several who may be worthy of censure in a certain degree, their errors are less pernicious and criminal, than they are uncharitably or rashly represented to be.

VI. It is, at the same time, evident, that, in this century, the arts and sciences were carried to a degree of perfection unknown to preceding ages; and, from this happy renovation of learning, the European churches derived the most signal and inestimable advantages, which they also transmitted to the most remote nations. The benign influence of true science, and its tendency to improve both the form of religion and the institutions of civil policy, were perceived by many of the states and princes of Europe. Hence large fums were expended, and great zeal and industry employed, in promoting the progress of knowledge, by founding and encouraging literary focieties, by protecting and exciting a spirit of emulation among men of genius, and by annexing distinguished honours and advantages to the culture of the sciences. And it is particularly worthy of observation, that this was the period, when the wife and falutary law, which excludes ignorant and illiterate persons from the sacred functions of the Christian ministry, acquired, at length, that force which it still retains in the greatest part of the Christian world. There still remained, however, some seeds of that ancient discord between religion and philosophy, that had been sown and fomented by ignorance and fanaticism; and there were found, both among the friends and enemies of the Reformation, several well-meaning, but inconsiderate men, who, in spite of common sense, maintained with more vehemence and animofity than ever, that vital religion and piety could never flourish without being totally separated from learning and science, and nourished by the holy simplicity that reigned in the primitive ages of the church.

<sup>[1]</sup> See Reimanni Historia Atheismi et Atheorum, Hildes. 1725, in 8vo.—Jo. Franc. Buddeus, Theses de Atheismo et Superstitione, cap. i.—Dictionaire de Bayle, passim.

The public advantages that arose from the restoration of letters.

The flourithing state of philosophy. VII. The first rank in the literary world was now enjoyed by those who consecrated their studious hours, and their critical sagacity, to the publication, tion, correction, and illustration, of the most famous Greek and Latin authors of ancient times, to the study of antiquity and the languages, and to the culture of eloquence and poetry. We see by the productions of this age (which yet remain, and continue to excite the admiration of the learned), that in all the provinces of Europe these branches of literature were cultivated with a kind of enthufiasm, by such as were most distinguished by their taste and genius; and, what is still more extraor. dinary, (and perhaps not a little extravagant,) the welfare of the church, and the prosperity of the state, were supposed to depend upon the improvement of these branches of erudition, which were considered as the very essence of true and solid knowlege. If fuch encomiums were fwelled beyond the bounds of truth and wisdom by enthusiastical philologists, it is nevertheless certain, that the species of learning here under consideration, was of the highest importance, as it opened the way that led to the treasures of solid wisdom, to the improvement of genius, and thus undoubtedly contributed, in a great measure, to deliver both reason and religion from the prepossessions of ignorance, and the fervitude of superstition  $\lceil m \rceil$ . And, there-

[m] Many vehement debates have been carried on concerning the respective merit of Literature and Philosophy. But these debates are almost as abfurd as a comparison that should be made between the means and the end, the instrument and its effect. Literature is the key by which we often open the treasures of wildom, both human and divine. But as the fordid mifer converts abfurdly the means into an end, and acquires a passion for the shining metal, considered abstractedly from the purposes it was designed to serve, so the pedantic philologist erects literature into an independent science, and contemns the divine treasures of philosophy, which it was defigned both to discover and to illustrate. Hence arose that wretched tribe of "word-catchers that live on fyllables" (as Pope, I think, happily expresses their tasteless pursuits), who made TOL. IV.

CENTA XVI, BECT. 114 CENT. XVI. SECT. 11. therefore, we ought not to be surprised, when we meet with persons who exaggerate the merit, and dwell beyond measure on the praises of those who were our first guides from the regions of darkness and error, into the luminous paths of evidence and truth.

The state of philosophy.

VIII. Though the lovers of philology and the belles lettres were much superior in number to those who turned their principal views to the study of philosophy, yet the latter were far from being contemptible either in point of number or capacity. The philosophers were divided into two classes: some were wholly absorbed in contemplation, while others were employed in the investigation of truth, and endeavoured by experience, as well as by reafoning, to trace out the laws and operations of Nature. The former were subdivided into two fects, of which the one followed certain leaders, while the other, unrestrained by the dictates of authority, struck out a new way for themselves, following freely their own inventions. Those who submitted to the direction of philosophical guides, enlisted themselves under the standard of Aristotle, or that of Plato, who continued still to have many admirers, especially in Italy. Nor were the followers of Aristotle agreed among themselves; they all acknowleged the Stagirite as their chief, but they followed him through very different paths. Some were for retaining the ancient method of proceeding in philosophical pursuits, which their doctors falsely called the Peripatetic system. Others pleaded for the pure and unmixed philosophy of Aristotle, and recommended the writings of that made the republic of letters groan under their commentaries, annotations, various readings, &c. and who forgot that the knowledge of language was intended to lead us to the improvement of the mind, and to the knowlege of things.

Grecian

CENT.

Grecian fage as the fource of wisdom, and as the fystem which was most adapted, when properly illustrated and explained, to the instruction of youth. A third fort of Aristotelians, who differed equally from these now mentioned, and of whom the celebrated Melancthon was the chief, pursued another method. They extracted the marrow out of the lucubrations of Aristotle, illustrated it by the aids of genuine literature and the rules of good criticism, and corrected it by the dictates of right reason and the doctrines and principles of true religion.

Of those who struck out a path to themselves in the regions of philosophy, without any regard to that which had been opened by ancient sages, and pursued by their followers, Cardan [n], Telesius [o],

and

[n] Cardan was a man of a bold, irregular, enterprizing genius, who, by a wild imagination, was led into the study of aftrology and magic, by which he excited the aftonishment and attracted the veneration of the multitude, while his real merit as a philosopher was little known. He was accused of atheism, but seems much rather chargeable with superstition. His life and character feem to have formed an amazing mixture of wisdom and folly; and nothing can give a more unfavourable idea of his temper and principles, than the hideous portrait he has drawn of himself in his book de genituris. His knowlege of physic and of mathematics was considerable, and his notions of natural philosophy may be seen in his samous book de subtilitate et veritate rerum, in which some important truths and discoveries are mixed with the most fanatical visions, and the most extravagant and delirious effusions of mystical folly. See the ample and judicious account that has been given of the charamer and philosophy of this writer (whose voyage to Britain is well known) by the learned Brucker, in his Historia Critica Philosophia, tom. iv. part II. lib. i. cap. iii.

[0] This philosopher, less known than the former, was born in 1508, at Cosenza, in the kingdom of Naples, and was the restorer of the philosophy formerly taught by Parmenides, upon whose principles he built a new system, or, at least, a system which appeared new, by the elegant connection which he gave to its various parts, and the arguments used to maintain and support it against the philosophy of Aristotle. It was the vague and uncertain method of reasoning which the Stagirite had introduced into natural philosophy, that engaged Telesius to compose his famous book de principiis rerum naturalium. In this work, after having refuted the visionary principles of the Aristotelian philosophy, he substitutes in their place such as are immediately derived from the testimony of the senses, even heat and cold, from which, like Parmenides, he deduces the nature, origin, qualities and changes of all material beings. To these two principles he adds a third, viz. matter; and on these three he builds with fome dexterity his physical system; for a part of which he seems also to have been indebted to a book of Plutarch, de prime frigido. It will be entertaining to the philosophical reader, to compare this work of Telefius with lord Bacon's physical account of the story of Cupid and Cœlus, in his book de principiis et originibus, &c.

CENT. XVI. and Campanella [p], hold, deservedly, the first rank, as they were undoubtedly men of superior genius,

[p] Campanella, a native of Calabria, made a great noise in the seventeenth century, by his innovations in philosophy. Shocked at the atheism and absurdities of the Aristotelian system, he acquired early a contempt of it, and turned his pursuits towards something more solid, perusing the writings of all the ancient fages, and comparing them with the great volume of nature, to see whether the pretended copies resembled the original. The sufferings that this man endured are almost incredible; but they were said to be inslicted on him in consequence of the treasonable practices that were imputed to him, partly against the court of Spain, and partly against the kingdom of Naples, which (it was supposed) he had formed the defign of delivering into the hands of the He was freed from his prison and tortures by the interpolition of pope Urban VIII., who gave him particular marks of his favour and esteem, and, finding that he was not fafe at Rome, had him conveyed to Paris, where he was honoured with the protection of Louis XIII. and cardinal Richelieu, and ended his days in peace. As to the writings and philosophy of this great man, they are tinged, indeed, with the colour of the times, and bear, in many places, the marks of a chimerical and undisciplined imagination; but, among a few visionary notions, they contain a great number of important truths. He undertook an entire reformation of philosophy, but was unequal to the task. For an account of his principles of logic, ethics, and natural philosophy, see Brucker's genius, though too much addicted to the suggestions and visions of an irregular fancy. To these may be added Peter Ramus, that subtle and ingenious French philosopher, who, by attempting to substitute, in the place of Aristotle's logic, a method of reasoning more adapted to the use of rhetoric and the improvement of eloquence, excited such a terrible uproar in the Gallic schools. Nor must we omit here the mention of Theophrastus Paracelsus, who by an assiduous observation of nature, by a great number of experiments indefatigably repeated, and by applying the penetrating force of fire [q] to discover the first principles or elements of bodies, endeavoured to throw new light and evidence on the important science of natural philosophy. the researches of this industrious inquirer into nature excited the admiration of all, his example was consequently followed by many; and hence arose a new sect of philosophers, who assumed the denomination of Theosophists [r], and who, placing little confidence in the decisions of human reason,

CENT. XVI.

Brucker's Hift. Critica Philosophia, tom. iv. part II. p. 127, &c. He was accused of atheism, but unjustly; he was also accused of suggesting cruel measures against the protestants, and not without reason.

[q] The principal merit of Paracellus confilted in inventing, or at least restoring from oblivion and darkness, the important science of chemistry, giving it a regular form, reducing it into a connected system, and applying it most successfully to the art of healing, which was the peculiar profession of this philosopher, whose friends and enemies have drawn him in the falsest colours. His application to the study of magic, of which he treats in the tenth volume of his works, under the denomination of the Sagacious Philosophy, is a circumstance dishonourable to his memory, and nothing can discover a more total absence of common sense and reasoning than his discourses on that subject. As, to his philosophical system it is so obscure, and so contradictory, that we shall not pretend to delineate it here.

[r] See, for an ample account of the lives, transactions, and systems of these philosophers, Brucker's Historia Critica Philosophia.

CENT. XVI.

The method of teaching theology improved,

or the efforts of speculation, attributed all to divine illumination and repeated experience.

IX. This revolution in philosophy and literature, together with the spirit of emulation that animated the different fects or classes into which the learned men of this age were divided, produced many happy effects of various kinds. It, in a more particular manner, brought into disrepute, though it could not at once utterly eradicate, that intricate, barbarous, and infipid method of teaching theology, which had hitherto prevailed in all the schools and pulpits of Christendom. The facred writings, which, in the preceding ages, had been either entirely neglected, or very absurdly explained, were now much more consulted and respected in the debates and writings of the Christian doctors than they had formerly been; the fense and language of the inspired writers were more carefully studied and more accurately developed; the doctrines and precepts of religion taught with more method, connexion, and perspicuity; and that dry, barren, and vapid language, which the ancient schoolmen affected so much in their theological compofitions, was wholly exploded by the wifer part of the divines of this century. It must not however be imagined, that this reformation of the schools was so perfect, as to leave no room for improvement in succeeding ages; this, indeed, was far from being the case. Much impersection yet remained in the method of treating theology; and many things, which had great need of a correcting hand, were left untouched. It would, nevertheless, be either an instance of ingratitude, or a mark of great ignorance, to deny this age the honour of having begun what was afterwards more happily finished, and of having laid the foundations of that striking superiorly, which the divines of succeeding ages obtained over those of ancient times.

X. The

X. The improvements, which have been now mentioned, as proceeding from the restoration of letters and philosophy, not only extended to the method of conveying theological instruction, but and the general nius and also purified the science of theology itself. For the spirit of the true nature, genius, and design of the Christian Christian religion religion, which even the most learned and pious beiter doctors of antiquity had but imperfectly compre- explained. hended, were now unfolded with evidence and precision, and drawn, like truth, from an abyss in which they had hitherto lain concealed. It is true, the influence of error was far from being totally suppressed, and many false and absurd doctrines are still maintained and propagated in the Christian world. But it may nevertheless be affirmed, that the Christian societies, whose errors at this day are the most numerous and extravagant, have much less absurd and perverse notions of the nature and design of the gospel, and the duties and obligations of its votaries, than were entertained by those doctors of antiquity, who ruled the church with an absolute authority, and were considered as the chief oracles of theology. It may further be observed, that the Reformation contributed much to foften and civilize the manners of many nations, who, before that happy period, were funk in the most savage stupidity, and carried the most rude and insocial aspect. It must indeed be confessed, that a variety of circumstances, not immediately connected with religion, combined to produce that lenity of character, and that milder temperature of manners, maxims and actions, that gradually appeared in the greatest part of the European nations, after that period which was fignalifed by the reformative exertions of Luther. It is nevertheless evident, beyond all contradiction, that the disputes concerning religion, and the accurate and rational inqui-L 4

CENT.

CENT. XVI. inquiries into the doctrines and duties of Christianity to which those disputes gave rise, had a great tendency to eradicate from the minds of men the ferocity that had been to long nourished by the barbarous suggestions of unmanly superstition. It is also certain, that at the very dawn of this happy revolution in the state of Christianity, and even before its salutary effects were manifested in all their extent, pure religion had many sincere and fervent votaries, though they were concealed from public view by the multitudes of fanatics with which they were surrounded.

SECTION III.

THE PARTICULAR HISTORY OF THE CHURCH,

PART I.

THE HISTORY OF THE ANCIENT CHURCHES.

CHAP. I.

History of the Roman or Latin Church.

THE Roman or Latin church is a system of xv government, whose jurisdiction extends over a great part of the known world, though its authority has been circumscribed within narrower limits The Roman fince the happy revolution that, in many countries, portiff, delivered Christianity from the yoke of superstition and spiritual tyranny. This system of ecclesiastical policy, extensive as it is, is under the direction of the bishop of Rome alone, who, by virtue of a fort of hereditary succession, claims the authority, prerogatives, and rights of St. Peter, the supposed prince of the apostles, and gives himself out for the supreme head of the universal church, the vicegerent of Christ upon earth. This lordly ruler of the church is, at this time, elected to his high office, by the chosen members of the Roman clergy, who bear the ancient denomination of cardinals. Of these, fix are bishops, within the precincts of Rome; fifty are ministers of the Roman churches, and are called priests or presbyters; and fourteen are inspectors of the hospitals and charitable foundations,

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

dations, and are called deacons. These cardinals, while the papal chair is vacant, and they are employed in the choice of a successor to the deceased pontiff, are closely confined in a fort of prison, called the Conclave, that they may thus be induced to bring this difficult matter to a speedy conclusion. No person, except one who is an Italian by descent, and who has already obtained a place in the college of cardinals, is capable of being raifed to the head of the church: nor have all the Italian cardinals the privilege of aspiring to this high office [a]. Some are rendered incapable of filling the papal chair by the place of their birth, others by their manner of life, and a few by other reasons [b]. It is also to be observed, that the emperor and the kings of France and Spain have acquired, whether expressly by stipulation, or imperceptibly through

[a] See J. F. Mayer's Commentarius de Electione Pontif. Romani, published in 4to at Hamburg, in the year 1631. The ceremonies observed in the election and installation are amply described by Meuschen, in a work published at Frankfort in the year 1732, under the following title: Ceremoniale Electionis et Coronationis Pontificis Romani.

[b] The great obstacle that prevents several cardinals from aspiring at the pontificate, is what they call at Rome, il peccato originale, or original sin. This mark of exclusion belongs to those who are born-subjects of some crown, or republic, that are not within the bounds of Italy, or which are upon a footing of jealousy with the court of Rome. Those also who were made cardinals by the nomination of the kings of France or Spain, or their adherents, are also included in this imputation of original sin, which excludes from the papal chair. The accidental circumstances that exclude certain cardinals from the pontificate, are their being born princes or independent sovereigns, or their declaring themselves openly in favour of certain courts, or their family's being too numerous, or their morals being irregular. Even youth, and a good complexion and figure, are considered as obstacles. But all these maxims and rules vary and change according to the inconstant and precarious impulse of policy and faction.

For an account of the differe t methods of electing the pope, whether by compromife, inspiration, scrutiny, or access (by which last is meant a second election, employed when the other methods fail), see Aymon's Tableau de la Cour de custom, the privilege of excluding, from the number of the candidates for this high office, such as they think proper to oppose or dislike. Hence it often happens, that in the numerous college of cardinals, a very small number are permitted, upon a vacancy, to aspire to the papacy; the greatest part being generally prevented by their birth, their character, their circumstances, and by the force of political intrigues, from flattering themselves with the pleasing hope of ascending that towering summit of ecclesiastical power and dominion.

Rome.

II. It must not be imagined, that the personal The power of the pope power and authority of the Roman pontiff are limited. circumscribed by no limits; since it is well known, that, in all his decisions relating to the government of the church, he previously consults the brethren, i. e. the cardinals, who compose his ministry or privy council. In matters of religious controversy and doctrine, he is even obliged to ask the advice and opinion of eminent divines, in order to secure his pretended infallibility from the suggestions of error. Besides this, all affairs, that are not of the highest moment and importance, are divided into classes according to their respective nature, and left to the management of certain colleges, called Congregations [c], cr[c] These congregations are as follow: I. The congregation of the pope, instituted first by Sixtus V. to prepare the matters that were to be brought before the Confistory, at which the pontiff is always present. Hence this is called the Consistorial Congregation, and in it are treated all affairs relative to the erection of bishoprics and cathedral churches, the re-union or suppression of episcopal fees, the alienation of church goods, and the taxes and annates that are imposed upon all benefices in the pope's gift. The cardinal dean presides in this assembly. II. The congregation of the Inquisition, or (as it is otherwise called) of the Holy Office, instituted by Paul III., which takes cognizance of herelies, apollaly, magic, and protane writings. It assembles thrice in the week, and every Thursday in presence of the pope, who presides in it. The office of Grand Inquisitor, CENT. in every one of which, one or more cardinals pre-quilitor, which encroached upon the prerogatives of the pontiff, has been long suppressed, or rather distributed among the cardinals who belong to this congregation, and whole decisions come under the supreme cognizance of his holinels. III. The congregation for the propagation of the Roman Catholic Faith, founded under the pontificate of Gregory XV. composed of eighteen cardinals, one of the secretaries of state, a prothonotary, a fecretary of the inquisition, and other members of less rank. Here it is that the deliberations are carried on, which relate to the extirpation of herefy, the appointment of missionaries, &c. This congregation has built a most beautiful and magnificent palace in one of the most agreeable fituations that could be chosen at Rome, where proselytes to popery from foreign countries are lodged and nourished gratis, in a manner suitable to their rank and condition, and instructed in those branches of knowlege to which the bent of their genius points. The prelates, curates, and vicars also, who are obliged, without any fault of theirs, to abandon the places of their residence, are entertained charitably in this noble edifice in a manner proportioned to their station in the church. IV. The congregation designed to explain the decisions of the council of Irent. V. The congregation of the Index, whose principal business is to examine manuscripts and books that are beligned for publication, to decide whether the people may be permitted to read them, to correct those books whose errors are not numerous, and which contain useful and salutary truths, to condemn those whose principles are heretical and pernicious, and to grant to certain individuals the peculiar privilege of perusing heretical books. This congregation, which is sometimes held in the presence of the pope, but generally in the palace of the cardinal-president, has a more extensive jurisdiction than that of the inquisition, as it not only takes cognizance of those books that contain doctrines contrary to the Roman Catholic faith, but of those also which concern the duties of morality, the discipline of the church, and the interests of society. Its name is derived from the alphabetical tables, or indexes of heretical books and authors, which have been composed by its appointment. VI. The congregation for maintaining the rights and immunities of the clergy, and of the knights of Malta. This congregation was formed by Urban VIII. to decide the disputes, and remove the disticulties and inconveniences that arose from the trials of ecclesiastics, before princes, or other lay-judges. VII. The congregations relating to the bishess and regular clergy, instituted by Sixtus V. to decide the debates which arile between the bishops and their diocelans, and to compose the differences that happen fo fide [d]. The decisions of these societies are generally approved by the pontist, who has not a right, without alleging the most weighty and fo frequently among the monastic orders. VIII. The congregation, appointed by Gregory XIV. for examining the capacity and learning of the bishops. IX. Another for inquiring into their lives and morals. X. A third for obliging them to reside in their dioceses, or to dispense them from that obligation. XI. The congregation for suppressing monasteries, i.e. such whose revenues are exhausted, and who thereby become a charge upon the public. XII. The congregation of the Apostolic Visitation, which names the visitors, who perform the duties and visitations of the churches and convents within the district of Rome, to which the pope is obliged as archbishop of that city. XIII. The congregation of Relics, authorized to examine the marks, and to augment the number of these inftruments of superstition. XIV. The congregation of indulgences, defigned to examine the case of those who have recourse to this method of quieting the conscience. XV. The congregation of Rites, which Sixtus V. appointed to regulate and invent the religious ceremonies that are to be observed in the worship of each new saint that is added to the Kalendar.

SECT. III.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

These are the congregations of cardinals, set apart for administering the spiritual assairs of the church; and they are undoubtedly, in some respects, a check upon the power of the pontist, enormous as it may be. There are six more, which relate to the temporal government of the papal territories. In these congregations, where the pope is never present, all things are transacted which relate to the execution of public justice in civil or criminal matters, the levying of taxes, the providing the cities and provinces with good governors, the relieving those who are unjustly oppressed by subordinate magistrates, the coinage, the care of the rivers, aqueducts, bridges, roads, churches, and public edifices.

[d] The court of Rome is very particularly and accurately described by Aymon (who had been, before his conversion to the protestant religion, domestic chaplain to Innocent XI.) in a book entitled, Tableau de la Cour de Rome, of which the first edition was published at the Hague, in 8vo. in the year 1707, and the second in 1726:—See also Relation de la Cour de Rome, et des Ceremonies qui s'y observent, which father Labat has translated into French, from the Italian of Jerome Limadoro, and subjoined to his Voyages en Espagne et Italie, tom. viii. p. 105.—For an account of the Roman congregations, &c. see Doroth. Ascian. De Montibus Pietatis Romanis, p. 510. as also Hunold. Plettenberg, Notitia Tribunalium Congregationum Curie Romane, Hildesie, in 8vo. 1693.

evident

8=3

$26. $26. $26. $26. $26. he just and expedient. This form of exclainfical government is, doubtless, a check to the authority of the page; and hence it is, that many things are transacted at Rome in a manner that is in direct apposition to the fentiments of its spiritual suier. This may serve to shew us, that those persons are little acquainted with the nature and limits of the papal hierarchy, who presend, that all the iniquitous proceedings of the court of Rome, the calamities it has occusioned, the contentions, rebellions, and tumults it has excited, are entirely imputable to the Roman pontiff [e].

Distant
sette soncoming the power of the Roman ponrisk

III. The power of the Roman pontiff hath excited detates even among those who are under the papal hierarchy; and the spiritual subjects of this pretended head of the church, are very far from being agreed with respect to the extent of his authority and juridiction. Hence it happens, that this authority and dominion are not the fame in all places, having a larger scope in some provinces, and being reduced within narrower bounds in others. If, indeed, we consider only the pretensions of the pontiff, we shall find that his power is unlimited and supreme; for there are no prerogatives that can flatter ambition, which he does not claim for himself and his court. He not only pretends, that the whole power and majesty of the church reside in his person, and are transmitted, in certain portions, from him to the inferior bishops, but moreover asserts the absolute infallibility of all decisions and decrees that he pronounces from his lordly tribunal. These arrogant pretensions are, however, opposed by many, and chiefly by the French, who expressly maintain, that every bishop receives immediately from Christ himself a portion of that spiritual power which is imparted to the church; that the collective fum, or whole of this power, is lodged in the collectivebody of its pastors, or (which is the same thing.) in a general council lawfully assembled; and that the pontiff, considered personally, and as distinct from the church, is liable to error. This complicated and important controversy may be easily brought within narrower bounds, and may be reduced to the following plain question; viz. Is the Roman pontiff, properly speaking, the Legislator of the church, or, is he no more than the Guardian and Depository of the laws enacted by Christ and the church? There is no prospect of seeing this question decided, or the debates terminated to which is has given rise; since the contending parties do not even agree about the proper and lawful judge of this important controversy [f]. Some great revolution alone can effect the decision of this matter.

[e] Hence arises that important distinction, frequently employed by the French and other nations in their debates with the Roman pontiff; I mean, the distinction between the pope and the court of Rome. The latter is often loaded with the bitterest reproaches and the heaviest accusations, while the former is spared, and in some measure excused. Nor is this distinction by any means groundless; since the cardinals and congregations, whose rights and privileges are deemed sacred, undertake and execute many projects without the knowledge, and sometimes against the will and consent, of the pontiss himself.

Chap. I. History of the Roman or Latin Church.

CENT.

IV. The church of Rome loss much of its an- The declencient splendor and majesty, as soon as Luther, shurch of and the other luminaries of the Reformation, had Rome.

[f] The arguments employed by the creatures of the Roman pontiff in defence of his unlimited authority, may be seen in Bellarmine and other writers, of which an enormous collection has been made by Roccaberti; and what is not a little extraordinary, a French writer, named Petitdier, appeared if defence of the pope's pretentions, in a book published at Luxemburg, in the year 1724, Sur l'Authorité et l' Infallibilité des Papes. The sentiments of the Gallican church, and the arguments by which it opposes the pretentions of Rome, may be seen in the writings of Richer and Launon exhibited

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

exhibited to the view of the European nations the Christian religion restored, at least to a considerable part of its native purity, and delivered from many of the superstitions under which it had lain so long disfigured. Among the most opulent states of Europe, several withdrew entirely from the jurisdiction of Rome; in others, certain provinces threw off the yoke of papal tyranny; and upon the whole, this defection produced 2 Ariking diminution both of the wealth and power et the Roman pontiffs. It must also be observed, that even the kings, princes, and sovereign states, who adhered to the religion of Rome, yet changed their sentiments with respect to the claims and pretensions of its bishop. If they were not perfuaded by the writings of the protestants to recounce the superstitions of popery, yet they received most useful instructions from them in other matters of very great moment. They drew from these writings important discoveries of the groundless claims and unlawful usurpations of the Roman contiffs, and came, at length, to perceive, that, if the jurisdiction and authority of Rome should continue the same as before the rise of Luther, the rights of temporal princes, and the majesty of civil government, would, sooner or later, be absorbed in the gulph of papal avarice and ambition. Hence it was, that most of the sovereign states of Europe, partly by secret and prudent meafures, partly by public negotiations and remonstrances, set bounds to the daring ambition of Rome, which aimed at nothing less than universal dominion both in ecclesiastical and civil affairs; nor did he pontiff think it either safe or expedient to have recourse to the ancient arms of the church, war and excommunication, in order to repel these attacks upon his authority. Even those very kingdoms, which acknowledged the Roman pontiff as the lawgiver of the church, and an infallible guide, confine his power of enacting laws within narrow limits.

CENT. IVK. bect. 14. PART 1.

The methods employed by the Roman postiffs to repair ther.

V. In this declining state of their assairs, it was natural for the humbled pontiffs to look about for fome method of repairing their loffes; and, for this purpose, they exerted much more zeal and industry, than had been shewn by their predecesfors, in extending the limits of their spiritual dominion beyond Europe, and left no means unemployed of gaining profelytes and adherents in the Indies and in Africa, both among the pagan nations and the Christian sects. The Jesuits, as we have Missions. already had occasion to observe, were the first missionaries who were employed for this purpose in those distant parts of the world; but able men, selected from the other monastic orders, were afterwards entrusted with this arduous undertaking. If, however, we except the exploits of Francis Xavier and his companions in India, China, and Japan, of which notice has been already taken, there were no great matters effected in this century; as, generally speaking, the persons who were appointed to execute this grand project, were not endowed with that experience and dexterity which it necesfarily required, and entered upon the work with more zeal than prudence and knowledge.

The Portuguese had, in the preceding century, opened a passage into the country of the Abyssinians, who professed the doctrine, and observed the religious rites of the Monophysites; and hence arose a favourable occasion of reducing that people under the papal yoke. Accordingly John Bermudez was fent into Ethiopia for this purpose; and, that he might appear with a certain degree of dignity, he was clothed with the title of Patriarch of the Abysfinians. The same important commission was afterwards given to Ignatius Loyola, and the TOL. IV.

CBNT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. the companions of his labours [g]; and, at the commencement of their undertaking, several circumstances, and particularly a war with a neighbouring prince, which the Abyssinian monarch was desirous of terminating by the powerful succours of the Portuguese, seemed to promise them a successful and happy ministry. But the event did not answer this fond expectation; and, in some time, it appeared plainly, that the Abyssinians stood too firm in the faith of their ancestors, to be easily engaged to abandon and forsake it; so that, towards the conclusion of this century, the Jesuits had almost lost all hopes of succeeding in their attempts [b].

The Egyptians and Armenians.

VI. The Egyptians, or Copts, who were closely connected with the Abyssinians in their religious sentiments, and also in their external forms of worship, became the next objects of Rome's ambitious zeal; and, in the year 1562, Christopher Roderic, a Jesuit of note, was sent, by the express order of pope Pius IV. to propagate the cause of popery among that people. This ecclesiastic, notwithstanding the rich presents and subtle arguments by which he attempted to change the sentiments and shake the constancy of Gabriel [i], who was at that time patriarch of Alexandria, returned to Rome with no other ef-

[g] It is certainly by mistake that Dr. Mosheim mentions Loyola as having made a voyage into Abysinia. Jesuits were sent at different periods to that country, and with little success; but their sounder was never there in person.

[b] See Ludolfi Histor. Ethiopica et Comm.—Geddes, Church History of Ethiopia, p. 120.—Le Grand, Dissertation de la Conversion des Abyssins, which is to be sound in the second volume of the Voyage Historique d'Abyssine du R. P. Jerome Lobo, p. 13.—La Croze, Histoire au Christianisme en Ethiopie, liv. ii. p. 90.

[i] Franc. Sacchini, Histor Societat. Jesu, part II. lib. v. Euseb. Renaudot, Historia Patriarchar. Alexandrin. p. 611—

Hi!. de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome iii. p. 314.

fect

fect of his embassy, than fair words and a few compliments [k]. It is, however true, that, in the year 1594, during the pontificate of Clement VIII. an embassy from another patriarch of Alexandria, whose name was also Gabriel, appeared at Rome, and was considered as a subject of triumph and boasting by the creatures of the pope [l]. But the more candid and sensible, even among the Roman catholics, looked upon this embassy, and not without reason, as a stratagem of the Jesuits to persuade the Abyssinians (who were so prone to follow the example of their brethren of Alexandria) to join themselves to the communion of Rome, and submit to the authority and jurisdiction of its pontiff [m]. It is at least certain, that after this solemn embassy, we do not find the smallest token of a propensity in the Copts to embrace the doctrine or discipline of Rome.

Many years before this period, a considerable sect of the Armenians had been accustomed to

to the council of Trent, in order to get rid of the importunity of these Jesuits; but he resused positively the sending any of his young students to be educated among their order, and declared plainly, that he owed no obedience or submission to the bishop of Rome, who had no more dignity or authority than any other bishop, except within the bounds of his own diocese. See Histoire des Religieux de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome ii. p. 322. 324.

[1]. The transactions of this embassy, adorned with an ample and pompous preface, are subjoined to the sixth volume of the Annal. Eccl. of Baronius, p. 707. edit. Antwerp.

[m] Renaudot, in his Hist. Patriarch. Alexandrin. p. 611, endeavours to maintain the credit and importance of this embassy, of which Baronius has given such a pompous account. He is, however, in an error when he asserts, that father Simon, relying upon the fallacious testimony of George Douza, was the only person who ever considered this embassy as a stratagem; since it is evident, that Thomas a Jesu, a Carmelite, in the sixth book of his treatise de Conversione omnium gentium procuranda, has considered it in the same light, as well as several other writers. See Geddes' Church History of Ethiopia, p. 231.

treat

CENT. XVL SECT. III. PART L treat the Roman pontiff with particular marks of veneration and respect, without departing, however, from the religious doctrine, discipline, or worship of their ancestors. Of this a farther account shall be given in the History of the Eastern Churches: it may, however, be proper to observe here, that the attachment of this sect to the bishop of Rome was greatly increased, and the votaries of the pontiff were confiderably multiplied, by the zeal of Serapion, an opulent man, who was entirely devoted to the court of Rome, and who, by engaging himself to discharge the debts under which the Armenians groaned, obtained, in the year 1593, the title and dignity of Patriarch, though there were already two patriarchs at the head of the Armenian church. He did not, however, long enjoy this dignity; for, soon after his promotion, he was sent into exile by the Persian monarch, at the desire of those Armenians who adhered to the ecclesiastical discipline of their ancestors; and thus the boasting and exultation of the Romans suddenly subsided, and their hopes vanished [n].

Nestorians and Indians.

VII. The ambitious views of the Roman pontiffs fowed the pestilential seeds of animosity and discord among all the eastern churches; and the Nestorian Christians, who are also known by the denomination of Chaldeans, selt early the effects of their imperious counsels. In the year 1551, a warm dispute arose among that people about the creation of a new patriarch, Simeon Barmamas being proposed by one party, and Sulaka earnestly desired by the other. The latter, to support his pretensions the more effectually, repaired to Rome, and was consecrated patriarch, in the year 1553, by pope Julius III. whose jurisdiction CENT. he had acknowledged, and to whose commands he had promised unlimited submission and obedience. Julius gave the name John to the new Chaldean patriarch, and, upon his return to his own country, fent with him feveral persons, skilled in the Syriac language, to assist him in establishing and extending the papal empire among the Nestorians. From this time that unhappy people were divided into two factions, and were often involved in the greatest dangers and difficulties by the jarring sentiments and perpetual quarrels of their patriarchs [0].

[n] See Nouveaux. Memoires des Missions de la Compagnis de Legus dans le Legust, tome iii. p. 132.

The Nestorians, or, as they are more commonly called, the Christians of St. Thomas, who inhabited a part of the coast of India, suffered much from the methods employed by the Portuguese to engage them to embrace the doctrine and discipline of the church of Rome, and to abandon the religion of their ancestors, which was much more fimple and infinitely less absurd [p]. The finishing stroke was put to the violence and brutality of these attempts by Don Alexis de Menezes, bishop of Goa, who, about the conclusion of this century, calling the Jesuits to his assistance, obliged this unhappy and reluctant people to embrace the religion of Rome, and to acknowledge the pope's supreme jurisdiction; against both of which acts they had always expressed the utmost abhorrence. These violent counsels and arrogant proceedings of Menezes, and his affociates, were condemned by such of the Roman-catholics as

[o] Jos. Sim. Assemani Bibliotheca Oriental. Clementino-Vaticana, tom. iii. part II, p. 164.

[p] For an account of the doctrines and worthip of these, and the other eastern Christians, see the following chapter; as also two learned books of Monsieur La Croze; one entitled, Histoire du Christianisme des Indes, and the other, Histoire du Christianisme en Ethiopie.

CENT. XVI. BCT. III. PART I. were most remarkable for their equity and wisdom  $\lceil q \rceil$ .

VIII. The greatest part of the first legates and missionaries of the court of Rome treated with much feverity and injustice the Christians whom they were desirous of gaining over to their communion. For they not only required that these Christians should renounce the particular opinions that separated them from the Greek and Latin churches, and that they should acknowledge the Roman pontiff as Christ's sole vicegerent upon earth: their demands went still farther; they opposed some opinions that were at least worthy of toleration, and others which were highly agreeable to the dictates both of reason and scripture; they infisted upon the suppression and abolition of several customs, rites, and institutions, which had been handed down from successive ancestors, and which were perfectly innocent in their nature and tendency; in a word, they would be fatisfied with nothing less than an entire and minute conformity of the religious rites and opinions of the people, with the doctrine and worship of the church of Rome. The papal court, however, rendered wife by experience, perceived at length that this manner of proceeding was highly imprudent, and very unlikely to extend the limits of the papal empire in the East. It was therefore determined to treat with more artifice and moderation a matter of fuch moment and importance, and the missionaries were, consequently, ordered to change the plan of their operations, and confine their views to the two following points; namely, the subjection of these Christians to the jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff, and their renouncing, or at least professing to renounce, the opinions that had been condemned in the general councils of the church. In all other matters, the Roman envoys were commanded to allow a perfect toleration, and to let the people remain unmolested in following the fentiments, and observing the institutions, which they To give the had derived from their ancestors. greater credit and plausibility to this new method of conversion, certain learned doctors of the church endeavoured to demonstrate, that the religious tenets of Rome, when explained according to the simplicity of truth, and not by the subtilties and definitions of the schools, differed very little from the opinions received in the Greek and the other But this demonstration was eastern churches. very far from being fatisfactory, and it discovered less of an ingenuous spirit, than a disposition to gain profelytes by all forts of means, and at all events. Be that as it may, the cause of Rome received much more advantage from this plan of moderation, than it had derived from the severity of its former counsels; though much less than the authors of this reconciling plan fondly expected.

<sup>[9]</sup> La Croze, Hift. du Christ. des Indes, liv. ii. p. 88.

167

XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

IX. While the pontiffs were using their utmost efforts to extend their dominion abroad, they did not neglect the means that were proper to strengthen and maintain it at home. On the contrary, from the dawn of the Reformation, they began to redouble their diligence in defending the internal form and constitution of the church of Rome against the dexterity and force of its adversaries. They could no more have recourse to the expedient of crusades, by which they had so often diminished the power and influence of their enemies. The revolutions which had happened in the affairs of Rome, and in the state of Europe, rendered any such method of subduing heretics visionary and impracticable. Other methods were, therefore, to be found out, and all the resources of prudence were to be exhausted in support of a declining church. Hence the laws and proceedings of the inquisition were revised and corrected

The internal confuitation of the church of Rome firength-ened in various ways.

CENT. in those countries where that formidable court permitted to exert its dreadful power. Colk and schools of learning were credted in vari places, in which the studious youth were trai up, by perpetual exercise, in the art of disput that thus they might wield, with more dexterity fuccels, the arms of controverfy against the ener of Rome. The circulation of such books as v supposed to have a pernicious tendency, was ei entirely prevented, or at least much obstructed certain lists or indexes, composed by men of le ing and fagacity, and published by authority which these books were marked with a note of famy, and their perusal prohibited, though v certain restrictions. The pursuit of knowledge earnestly recommended to the clergy, and home able marks of distinction, as well as ample rewa were bestowed on those who made the most markable progress in the cultivation of lett And, to enlarge no farther on this head, the you in general, were more carefully instructed in principles and precepts of their religion, than t had formerly been. Thus it happens, that sig advantages are frequently derived from what looked upon as the greatest evils, and much wisc and improvement are daily acquired in the fcl of opposition and adversity. It is more than 1 bable, that the church of Rome would never h been enriched with the acquisitions we have a been mentioning, had it continued in that state uninterrupted ease and undisputed authority wh nourish a spirit of indolence and luxury; and not the pretended heretics attacked its territor trampled upon its jurisdiction, and eclipsed a gi part of its ancient majesty and splendor.

X. The monastic orders and religious socie have been always considered by the Roman pon as the principal support of their authority and It is chiefly by them that they rule chur church, maintain their influence on the minds of the people, and augment the number of their votaries. And, indeed, various causes contribute to render the connection between the pontisf and these religious communities much more intimate, than that which subsists between him and the other clergy, of whatever rank or order we may suppose them to be. It was therefore judged necessary, when the success of Luther and the progress of the Reformation had effaced fuch a considerable part of the majesty of Rome, to found some new religious fraternity, that should, in a particular manner, be devoted to the interests of the Roman pontiff, and the very express end of whose institution should be to renew the vigour of a declining hierarchy, to heal the deep wound it had received, to preserve those parts of the papal dominions that remained yet entire, and to augment them by new accessions. This was so much the more necessary, as the two famous Mendicant societies [r], by whose ministry the popes had chiefly governed, during many ages, with success and glory, had now lost, on several accounts, a considerable part of their influence and authority, and were thereby less capable of serving the church with efficacy and vigour than they had formerly been. What the pontiff fought, in this declining state of his affairs, was found in that famous and most powerful society, which, from the name of Jesus, derived the appellation of Jesuits, while its members were Ryled by their enemies Loyolites from Loyola, and sometimes Inighists [s] from the Spanish name of their founder [t]. This zealot was Ignatius

Ignatives Loyula the Munder of the order ealled Jefuits.

169

FART 1.

Loyola,

[r] These two orders were the Franciscans and the Dominicans.

[s] The Spanish name of the sounder of this order was Don Inigo de Guipuscoa.

<sup>[1]</sup> The writers who have given the most particular and circumstantial accounts of the order of the Jesuits, are enumerated by Christoph. Aug. Salig, in his Historia August. Confession, tom. ii. p. 73.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I Lavola, a Spanish knight, who, from an illiterate indeed, of a tertile and enterprising genius [u], who, after having patient through various (cense of life, repaired to Rome, and, being there directed by the prodent countels of perions much wifer than himself, was rendered capable of inflicting such an order as the state of the church at that time effentially required [u].

The manner of the tion of the Jefeins.

Al. The letuits hold a middle rank between the monks and the jectuar cierks, and with respect to the nature of their infinite, approach nearer to the regular canons than to any other order. For though they man; but the greatest part of these biographers seem mure intent upon advancing the glory of their founder, than solicituus about the truth and sidelity of their relations; and hence the most common events, and the most trivial actions that concent Ignatius, are converted into prodigies and miracles. The history of this enterprising fanatic has been computed with equal truth and ingenuity, though sentenced with a very large portion of wit and pleasantry, by a French writer, who calls himself Psercules Rasiel de Selve. This work, which is divided into two volumes, is entitled, Hylaire de l'admirable Dan Iniga de Crisposcon, Chevalier de la Vierge, et sinduteur de la Manarchie des Inighistes.

the more learned and judicious Raman Catholics, have unanimoutly denied, that Ignatius Loyola had either learning inflicient to compose the writings of which he is faid to be the author, or genius enough to form the society of which he is considered as the sounder. They maintain, on the contrary, that he was no more than a flexible infirmment in the hands of able and ingenious men, who made use of his fortitude and smaticism to answer their purposes; and that persons much more learned than he, were employed to compose the writings which hear his name. See Geddes' Miscellaneous Tradis, vol. iii. p. 429.—The greatest part of his works are supposed to have proceeded from the pen of his secretary John de Palanco; see Ita Croze, Histoire du Christianisme en Eshiopie, p. 55. 271.

This is a feigned name; the real author was Monfieur Le Vier, an ingraince brokfeller, who lived formerly at the Hague.

they resemble the monks in this, that they live CENT. separate from the multitude, and are bound by sect. 116 religious vows, yet they are exempt from stated hours of worship, and other numerous and burthensome services, that lie heavy upon the monastic orders, that they may have more time to employ in the education of youth, in directing the consciences of the faithful, in edifying the church by their pious and learned productions, and in transacting other matters that relate to the prosperity of the papal hierarchy. Their whole order is divided into three classes. The first comprehends the professed members, who live in what are called the professed bouses; the second contains the scholars, who instruct the youth in the colleges; and to the third belong the novices, who live in the bouses of probation [x]. The professed members, befides the three ordinary vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, that are common to all the monastic tribes, are obliged to take a fourth, by which they solemnly bind themselves to go without deliberation or delay wherever the pope shall think fit to send them; they are also a kind of Mendicants, being without any fixed subsistence, and living upon the liberality of pious and well-disposed persons. The other Jesuits, and more particularly

The Benedictines affirm, that his book of Spiritual Exercises is copied from the work of a Spanish Benedictine monk, whose name was Cisneros (see La Viede M. de la Croze par Jordan); and the constitutions of the society were probably the work of Lainez and Salmeron, two learned men who were among its sirk members. See Histoire des Religieux de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome i. p. 115.

[x] Other writers add a fourth class, consisting of the spiritual and temporal co-adjutors, who assist the professed members, and perform the same functions, without being bound by any more than the three simple vows; though, after a long and approved exercise of their employment, the spiritual co-adjutors are admitted to the fourth vow, and thus become professed members.

tho

CENT. XVI. PRCT. III. PART 1. the scholars, possess large revenues, and are obliged, in case of urgent necessity, to contribute to the support of the professed members. These latter, who are few in number, in comparison with the other classes, are, in general, men of prudence and learning, deeply skilled in the affairs of the world, and dexterous in transacting all kinds of business from long experience, added to their natural penetration and fagacity; in a word, they are the true and perfect Jesuits. The rest have, indeed, the title, but are rather the companions and assistants of the Jesuits, than real members of that mysterious order; and it is only in a very vague and general fense, that the denomination of Jesuits can be applied to them. What is still more remarkable, the fecrets of the fociety are not revealed even to all the professed members. It is only a small number of this class, whom old age has enriched with thorough experience, and whom long trial has declared to be worthy of such an important trust, that are instructed in the mysteries of the order.

The zeal of the Jefuits for the intercits of the Ron an pontiff. XII. The church and court of Rome, fince the remarkable period when so many kingdoms and provinces withdrew from their jurisdiction, have derived more influence and support from the labours of this single order than from all their other emissaries and ministers, and all the various exertions of their power and opulence. It was this famous company, which, spreading itself with an astonishing rapidity over the greatest part of the habitable world, consirmed the wavering nations in the faith of Rome, restrained the progress of the rising sects, gained over a prodigious number of Pagans in the most barbarous and remote parts of the globe to the profession of popery, and attacked the pretended heretics of all denominations; appearing almost alone in the field of controcontroversy, sustaining with fortitude and resolution CENT. XVI. the whole burthen of this religious war, and surpaffing, by far, the champions of antiquity, both in the subtilty of their reasonings, and the eloquence of their discourses. Nor was this all; for, by the affected softness and complying spirit that reigned in their conversation and manners, by their confummate skill and prudence in civil transactions, by their acquaintance with the arts and sciences, and a variety of other qualities and accomplishments, they infinuated themselves into the peculiar favour and protection of statesmen, persons of the first distinction, and even of crowned heads. Nor did any thing contribute more to give them a general ascendency, than the cunning and dexterity with which they relaxed and modified their fystem of morality, accommodating it artfully to the propensities of mankind, and depriving it, on certain occasions, of the severity that rendered it burthensome to the sensual and voluptuous. By this they supplanted, in the palaces of the great, and in the courts of princes, the Dominicans and other rigid doctors, who had formerly held there the tribunal of confession and the direction of consciences; and engrossed to themselves an exclusive and irrelistible influence in those retreats of royal grandeur, whence issue the counsels that govern mankind [y]. An order of this nature could not but be highly adapted to promote the interests of the court of Rome; and this, indeed, was its great end, and the leading purpose of which it never loft fight; employing every where its utmost vigilance

[9] Before this order was instituted, the Dominicans alone directed the consciences of all the European kings and princes. And it was by the Jesuits that the Dominicans were deprived of a privilege so precious to spiritual ambition. See Peysat's Antiquitée de la Chapelle de France, liv. i. p. 322.

भावे

one is a unider the billions of the Roman of their for that the personal the comments of the c di tiete manager rance de mie uf store a e transcrous most e igne. Histor triver, her militare and there are the pipe: 124 i Pre 201202000 THOUSE IN homistics. & r welled the nurces of their nonmier, and programme to these desired at the community and narra at exceller leaves it reflect mit is secules. For r x ain me that their impal todour and appearages somet them. It the fame time. It the sum if ones reignous mines: that tion mornes mumilled from the to the and tiar tien were inter involver in the present perperde an wie. Mones munica civil magiltenier, provinc deciente, miner times elimente each the ting fairle of animium and police; mat a principile number of doubts were published the proper that are times could be more decembered 40 the unseredu of religion. and the well-being of because the infirming of the Beiling. In France, Poland, and other countries, they were der bused punice exercises of their country, mainers, and parkider, zid vere even bundled with hypermining zig. But the prodence, or mather the esule and writice, of the disciples of Lumin, calmed this lient of expedition, and, by genile and inproperties mustade, returned the credit and anthothy is their order, delivered it from the penils with which it had been threatened, and even put it in a state of defence against the future attempts of its adversaries  $\lceil a \rceil$ .

(x) Sen the Histoire des Religieux de la Compagnie de Jesus, tanne m. p. 48, &c.—Boulay, Hist. Academ. Parif. tom. vi. p. 459.— 144.— 20 well as almost all the writers (but more particularly the Jansonists), who have given accounts of the bataentic century.

XIII. The pontiffs of this century that ruled the PART I. church after the decease of Alexander VI., were Pius III., Julius II. [b], Leo X., Adrian VI., whose pontiffs.

SECT. III.

[a] The character and spirit of the Jesuits were admirably described, and their transactions and fate foretold, with a fagacity almost prophetic, so early as the year 1551, in a fermon preached in Christ-Church, Dublin, by Dr. George Brown, archbishop of that see; a copy of which was given to Sir James Ware, and may be found in the Harleian Miscellang (vol. v. p. 566). The remarkable passage relating to that order, is as follows: "There are a new fraternity of late " fprung up, who call themselves Jesuits, which will deceive er many, who are much after the Scribes' and Pharisees' mana ner. Amongst the Jews they shall strive to abolish the truth, " and shall come very near to do it. For these sorts will "turn themselves into several forms; with the heathens a "heathenist, with the atheists an atheist, with the Jews a Jew, with the Reformers a Reformade, purposely to know your "intentions, your minds, your hearts, and your inclinations, "and thereby bring you at last to be like the fool that said in " his heart, There was no God. These shall spread over the " whole world, shall be admitted into the councils of princes, " and they never the wifer; charming of them, yea, making " your princes reveal their hearts and the secrets therein, and " yet they not perceive it; which will happen from falling " from the law of God, by neglect of fulfilling the law of God, and by winking at their fins; yet in the end, God, " to justify his law, shall suddenly cut off this society, even " by the hands of those who have most succoured them, and " made use of them; so that, at the end, they shall become " odious to all nations. They shall be worse than Jews, having " no resting-place upon earth; and then shall a Jew have more " favour than a Jesuit."—This singular passage, I had almost faid prediction, seems to be accomplished in part, by the prefest suppression of the Jesuits in France (I write this note in the year 1762), and by the great indignation which the perfidious stratagems, iniquitous avarice, and ambitious views of that fociety, have excited among all orders of the French nation, from the throne to the cottage.

[b] It was from a foolish ambition of resembling Casar, (a very fingular model for a Christian pontiff,) that this pope, whole name was Rovere, assumed the denomination of Julius II. It may indeed be said, that Czsar was sovereign pontiff (postifex maximus), and that the bishop of Rome enjoyed the same dignity, though with some change in the title.

cha-

DRCT- III.

characters and transactions have been already noticed; Clement VII. of the house of Medici;—Paul III. of the illustrious family of Farnese [c], Julius III. [d], whose name was John Maria Giocci, - Marcellus II. — Paul IV. [e], whose name, before his

> [c] The sentiments and character of Paul III. have given rise to much debate, even in our time, especially between the late cardinal Quirini, and Keisling, Schelhorn, and some other writers. The cardinal has used his utmost efforts to desend the probity and merit of this pontiff; while the two learned men above-mentioned represent him as a persidious politician, whose predominant qualities were dissimulation and fraud. See Quirini's work de gestis Pauli III. Farnesii, Brixia, 1745, in 4to. Among the res gesta of Paul III. were two bastards, whose offspring, Farnese and Sforza, were made cardinals in their infancy. See Keislingii Epist. de gestis Pauli III. Schelhorn. Amanitates Hist. Eccles. et Liter. But the licentious exploits of this pope do not end here. He was reproa :hed, in a book published before his death under the us me of Ochino, with having poisoned his mother and his nephew, with having ravished a young virgin at Ancona, with an incestuous and adulterous commerce with his daughter Constantia, who died of poison administered by the pope, to prevent any interruption in his odious amours. It is said, in the same book, that, being caught in bed with his niece, Laura Farnese, who was the wife of Nic. Quercei, he received from this incensed husband a stab of a dagger, of which he bore the marks to his death. See Sleidan, Comment. de Statu Relig. et Reipublice, Carolo Quinto Cafura, lib. xxi. p. 667. edit. Argentor.

> [d] This was the worthy pontiff, who was scarcely seated in the papal chair, when he bestowed the cardinal's hat on the keeper of his monkeys, a boy cholen from among the lowest of the populace, and who was also the infamous object of his unnatural pleasures. See Thuan. lib. vi. & xv.-Hotis. Hist. Eccles. toin. v. p. 572-and more especially Sleidan, Histor. lib. xxi. Folio, m. 609. - When Julius was reproached by the cardinals for introducing such an unworthy member into the facred college, a person who had neither learning, nor virtue, nor merit of any kind, he impudently replied by asking them, "What virtue or merit they had found in him, that could induce them to place him (Julius) in the papel chair?"

> . or [e] Nothing could exceed the arrogance and ambition of this violent and impetuous postiff, as appears from his treatment

CENT. XVI.

his elevation to the pontificate, was John Peter Caraffa,—Pius IV. who was ambitious of being look- sect. in: ed upon as a branch of the house of Medicis, and who had been known, before his promotion, by the name of John Angelo de Medicis,—Pius V. a Dominican, called Michael Ghisleri, a man of an austere and melancholy turn of mind, by which, and other similar qualities, he obtained a place in the kalendar,—Gregory XIII. who was previously known by the name of Hugo Buoncompagno [f], -Sixtus V. otherwise named Felix Peretti di Montalto, who, in pride, magnificence, intrepidity, and strength of mind, and in other great virtues and vices, far surpassed all his predecessors,-Urban VIII. Gregory XIV. Innocent IX. the shortnels of whose reigns prevented them from acquiring reputation, or incurring reproach.

Among these pontiffs there were better and worse [g]; but they were all men of decent and even

treatment of queen Elizabeth. See Burnet's Mistory of the Reformation.—It was he who, by a bull, pretended to raise Ireland to the privilege and quality of an independent kingdom; and it was he also who first instituted the Index of prohibited books, mentioned above, note [c], sect. ii.

[f] See Jo. Petr. Maffei Annales Gregorii

Rom. 1742, in 4to.

[g] Pius V. and Sixtus V. made a much greater figure in the annals of fame, than the other pontiffs here mentioned; the former on account of his excessive severity against heretics, and the famous bull In Cana Domini, which is read publicly at Rome every year on the Festival of the Holy Sacrament; and the latter, in consequence of many services rendered to the church, and numberless attempts, carried on with spirit, fortitude, generosity, and perseverance, to promote its glory, and maintain its authority. - Several modern writers employed their pens in describing the life and actions of Pius V. so soon as they saw him canonised, in the year 1712, by Clement XI. Of the bull to which we have alluded, and the tumults it occasioned, there is an ample account in Giannone's Historia di Napoli, vol. iv. The life of Sixtus V. was written by Gregorio Leti, and the work has been translated into several languages; VOL. IT:

CENT. XVI 8147. ZZ 2017. Z

eren exemplar characters, when compared with the greatest pair of those who governed the church before the Reformation. For the number of adverfaries, both foreign and domestic, that arose to set limits to the desposition of Rose, and to call in queltion the authority and jurisdiction of its pontiff, rendered the college of cardinals, and the Roman nobility, more cautious and circumspect in the choice of a spiritual ruler; nor did they dare, in these critical circumstances of opposition and danger, to entrust such an important dignity to any ecclesiastic, whose bare-faced licentiousness, shameless arrogance, or inconsiderate youth, might render him peculiarly obnoxious to reproach, and furnish thereby new matter of censure to their adversaries. It is also worthy of observation, that from this period of opposition, occasioned by the ministry of the Reformers, the Roman pontiffs have never pretended to fuch an exclusive authority, as they had formerly usurped; nor could they, indeed, make good such pretensions, were they so presumptuous as to avow them. They claim, therefore, no longer a power of deciding, by their fingle authority, matters of the highest moment and importance; but, for the most part, pronounce according to the fentiments that prevail in the college of cardinals, and in the different congregations, which are entrusted with their respective parts in the government of the church; and they rarely venture to excite serious divisions in foreign states, to arm subjects against their rulers, or to level the thunder of their excommunications at the heads of princes. All fuch proceedings, which were formerly so frequent at the court of Rome, have been in a great measure suspended, in consequence of the gradual decline of that igno- CENT. rance and superstition which prescribed a blind XVI. obedience to the pontiff, and of the new degrees TART I. of power and authority that monarchs and other civil rulers have gained by the revolutions that have shaken the papal throne. In a word, imperious necessity has produced prudence and moderation even at Rome.

languages; it is, however, a very indifferent performance, and the relations it contains are, in many places, inaccurate and unfaithful.

XIV. That part of the body of the clergy, which the flate of the more peculiarly devoted to the Roman pontiffs, feemed to undergo no change during this cen-As to the bishops, it is certain that they made feveral zealous attempts, and fome even in the council of Trent, for the recovery of the ancient rights and privileges, of which they had been forcibly deprived by the popes. They were even persuaded that the pope might be lawfully obliged to acknowledge, that the episcopal dignity was of divine original, and that the bishops received their authority immediately from Christ himself [b]. But all these attempts were successfully opposed by the artifice and dexterity of the court of Rome, which did not cease to propagate and enforce this despotic maxim-"That the bishops are no more than the legates "or ministers of Christ's vicar; and that the au-"thority they exercise is entirely derived from "the munificence and favour of the apostolic see:"
maxim, however, that several bishops, and more especially those of France, treated with little respect. Some advantages, however, and those not inconsiderable, were obtained for the clergy at the expence of the pontiffs; for those reservations, provisions, exemptions, and expectatives (as they are termed by the Roman lawyers), which before the Reformation had excited such heavy and bitter complaints throughout Eurose, and exhibited the clearest proofs of papal avarice and tyranny, were now almost totally suppressed.

[b] See Paole Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent.

XVI. preffed.

The lives and morals of the clergy.

XV. Among the subjects of deliberation in the council of Trent, the reformation of the lives and manners of the clergy, and the suppression of the scandalous vices that had too long reigned in that order, were not forgotten; and several wise and prudent laws were enacted with a view to that important object. But those who had the cause of virtue at heart, complained (and the reason of fuch complaint still subsists) that these laws were no more than feeble precepts, without any avenging arm to maintain their authority; and that they were transgressed, with impunity, by the clergy of all ranks, and particularly by those who filled the highest stations and dignities of the church. In reality, if we cast our eyes upon the Romish clergy, even in the present time, these complaints will appear as well founded now, as they were in the fixteenth century. In Germany, as is notorious to daily observation, the bishops, if we except their habit, their title, and a few ceremonies that distinguish them, have nothing in their manner of living that is, in the least, adapted to point out the nature of their facred office. In other countries, a great part of the epifcopal order, unmolested by the remonstrances or reproofs of the Roman pontiff, pass their days amidst the pleasures and cabals of courts, and appear rather the flaves of temporal princes, than the servants of Him whose kingdom is not of this They court glory; they aspire after riches, while very few employ their time and labours in edifying the people, or in promoting among them the vital spirit of practical religion and substantial virtue; and (what is still more deplorable) those bishops, who, sensible of the fanctity of their character and the duties of their office, distinguish themselves by their zeal in the cause of virtue and good morals, are frequently exposed to the malicious efforts of envy, often loaded with false accusations, and involved in perplexities of various kinds. It may, indeed, be partly in consequence of the examples they have received, and still too often receive, from the heads of the church, that so many of the bishops live dissolved in the arms of luxury, or toiling in the service of ambition. Many of them, perhaps, would have been more attentive to their vocation, and more exemplary in their manners, if they had not been corrupted by the models exhibited to them by the bishops of Rome, and if they had not constantly before their eyes a splendid succession of popes and cardinals, remarkable only for their luxury and avarice, their arrogance and vindictive spirit, their voluptuousness and vanity.

loaded

Those ecclesiastics who go under the denomination of canons, continue, almost every where, their ancient course of life, and consume, in a manner far remote from piety and virtue, the treasures which the religious zeal, and liberality of their ancestors, had consecrated to the uses of the church and the relief of the poor.

It must not, however, be imagined, that all the other orders of the clergy are at liberty to follow fuch corrupt models, or, indeed, that their inclinations and reigning habits tend towards fuch a loose and voluptuous manner of living. For it is certain, that the Reformation had a manifest influence even upon the Roman Catholic clergy, by rendering them, at least, more circumspect and cautious in their external conduct, that they might be thus less obnoxious to the cenfures of their adversaries; and it is accordingly well known, that fince that period the clergy of the inferior orders have been more attentive than they formerly were to the rules of outward decency, and have given less offence by open and scandalou's vices and excesses.

XVI. The

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. III.
PART I.
Monks—
The ancient orders reformed.

XVI. The same observation holds good with respect to the monastic orders. There are, indeed, several things, worthy of the severest animadversion, chargeable upon many of the heads and rulers of these societies; nor are these societies themselves entirely exempt from that indolence, intemperance, ignorance, artifice, discord, and voluptuousness, that were formerly the common and reigning vices in the monastic retreats. It would be nevertheless an instance of great partiality and injustice to deny, that in many countries the manner of living, among these religious orders, has been considerably reformed, severe rules have been employed to restrain licentiousness, and much pains taken to conceal, at least, fuch vestiges of ancient corruption and irregularity as may yet remain. In some places, the austerity of the ancient rules of discipline, which had been fo shamefully relaxed, was restored by several zealous patrons of monastic devotion; while others, animated with the same zeal, instituted new communities, in order to promote, as they piously imagined, a spirit of religion, and thus to contribute to the well-being of the church.

Of this latter number was Matthew de Bassi, a native of Italy, the extent of whose capacity was much inferior to the goodness of his intentions, and who was a Franciscan of the more rigid class [i], who were zealous in observing rigorously the primitive rules of their institution. This honest enthusiast seriously persuaded himself, that Innocent IV.'s relaxing so far their institute as to allow property and possessions in their community, produced a division of the order into two classes, of which the most considerable, who adopted the papal relaxation, were denominated Conventuals, and the other, who rejected it, Brethren of the Observance. The latter professed to observe and follow rigorously the primitive laws and institute of their founder.

SECT. III.

PART 1.

183

he was divinely inspired with the zeal that impelled him to restore the rules of the Franciscan order to their primitive austerity; and, looking upon this violent and irrefistible impulse as a celestial commission, attended with sufficient authority, he commenced this work of monastic reformation with the most devout assiduity and ardour  $\lceil k \rceil$ . His enterprize was honoured, in the year 1525, with the folemn approbation of Clement VII.; and this was the origin of the order of Capuchins. The vows of this order implied the greatest contempt of the world and its enjoyments, and the most profound humility, accompanied with the most austere and fullen gravity of external aspect [1]; and its reputation and success excited, in the other Franciscans, the most bitter feelings of indignation and envy [m]. The Capuchins were so called from the sharp-pointed capuche, or cowl [n], which they added to the ordinary Franciscan habit, and

- [k] The Brethren of the Observance, mentioned in the preceding note, had degenerated, in process of time, from their primitive self-denial; and hence the reforming spirit that animated Bassi.
- [1] See Luc. Waddingi Annales Ordinis Minorum, tom. xvi. p. 207. 257. edit, Rom.—Helyot, Histoire des Ordres Munastiques, tome vii. ch. xxiv. p. 264.—And, above all, Zach. Boverii Annales Capucinorum.
- Franciscans, was the innovation made in their habit by the Capuchins. Whatever was the cause of their choler, true it is, that their provincial persecuted the new monks, and obliged them to fly from place to place, until they at last took refuge in the palace of the duke of Camerino, by whose credit they were received under the obcdience of the Conventuals, in the quality of hermits minors, in the year 1527. The next year the pope approved this union, and confirmed to them the privilege of wearing the square capuche; and thus the order was established in 1528.
- [n] I know not on what authority the learned Michael Geddes attributes the erection and denomination of this order to one Francis Puchine.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

which is supposed to have been used by St. Francis himself [0].

Another branch of the Franciscan order formed a new community, under the denomination of Recollets in France, Reformed Franciscans in Italy, and Barefooted Franciscans in Spain; these were erected into a separate order, with their respective laws and rules of discipline, in the year. 1532, by the authority of Clement VII. They differ from the other Franciscans in this only, that they profess to follow, with greater zeal and exactness, the austere institute of their common founder and chief; whence they were sometimes called Friars Minors of the strict observance [p].

St. Theresa, a Spanish lady of an illustrious family, undertook the difficult talk of reforming the Carmelite order [q], which had departed much from its primitive fanctity, and of restoring its neglected and violated laws to their original credit and authority. Her associate, in this arduous attempt, was Juan de Santa-Cruz; and her enterprize was not wholly unsuccessful, although the greater part of the Carmelites opposed her aims. Hence the order was, during the space of ten years, divided into two branches, of which one followed a milder rule of discipline, while the other embraced an institute of the most severe and selfdenying kind [r]. But, as these different rules of life among the members of the same community were a perpetual fource of animofity and discord, [o] See Du Fresne, Gloffarium Latinitat. medii evi, tom. ii. p. 298. edit. Benedict.

[p] See the Annales of Wadding, tom. xvi. p. 167.— Helyot, Histoire des Ordres Monast. tome vii. ch. xviii. p. 129. [q] Otherwise called the White Friars.

[r] The former, who were the Carmelites of the ancient. observance, were called the moderate or mitigated; while the latter, who were of the strict observance, were distinguished by the denomination of bare-footed Carmelites.

CENT.

the more austere, or bare-footed Carmelites, were separated from the others, and formed into a diftinct body, in the year 1580, by Gregory XIII. at the particular desire of Philip II. king of Spain. This separation was confirmed, in the year 1587, by Sixtus V. and completed, in 1593, by Clement VIII. who allowed the bare-footed Carmelites to have their own chief, or general, But, after having withdrawn themselves from the others, these austere friars quarreled among themselves, and in a few years their dissensions grew to an intolerable height; hence they were divided anew, by the last-mentioned pontiff, into two communities, each of which had its governor or general [s].

XVII. The most eminent of all the new orders New monate that were instituted in this century was, beyond tic orders. all doubt, that of the Jesuits, which we have al ready had occasion to mention, in speaking of the chief pillars of the church of Rome, and the principal supports of the declining authority of its pontiffs. Compared with this aspiring and formidable fociety, all the other religious orders appear inconsiderable and obscure. The Reformation, among the other changes which it occasioned, even in the Romish church, by exciting the circumfpection and emulation of those who still remained addicted to popery, gave rife to various communities, which were all comprehended under the general denomination of Regular Clerks. And as all these communities were, according to their own folemn declarations, formed with a defign of imitating that fanctity of manners, and reviving that spirit of piety and virtue, which had distinguished the sacred order in the primitive times; this was a plain, though tacit confession of the present corruption of the clergy, and consequently

[s] Helyot, Histoire des Ordres, tome i. ch. xlvii. p. 340.

CENT. of the indispensable necessity of the Reforma-

PART I.
Theatins.

The first society of these regular clerks arose in the year 1524, under the denomination of Theatins, which they derived from their principal founder John Peter Caraffa (then bishop of Theate, or Chieti, in the kingdom of Naples, and afterwards pope, under the title of Paul IV.,) who was affisted in this pious undertaking by Caietan, or Gaetan, and other devout affociates. These monks, being by their vows destitute of all possessions and revenues, and even secluded from the resource of begging, subsist entirely upon the voluntary liberality of pious persons. They are called by their profession and institute to revive a spirit of devotion, to purify and reform the eloquence of the pulpit, to affift the fick and the dying by their spiritual instructions and counsels, and to combat heretics of all denominations with zeal and assiduity [t]. There are also some semale convents established under the rule and title of this order.

Clerks of St. Paul. This establishment was followed by that of the Regular Clerks of St. Paul, so called from their having chosen that apostle for their patron; though they are more commonly known under the denomination of Barnabites, from the church of St. Barnabas, at Milan, which was bestowed upon them in the year 1545. This order, which was approved in 1532 by Clement VII. and confirmed about three years after by Paul III. was originally founded by Antonio Mavia Zacharias of Cremona, and Bartholomew Ferrari, and Ant. Morigia, noblemen of Milan. Its members were at first obliged to live after the manner of the Theatins, renouncing all worldly goods and possessions, and depending upon the [t] Helyot, tome iv. ch. xii. p. 71.

sponta-

fpontaneous donations of the liberal for their daily subsistence. But they soon became weary of this precarious method of living from hand to mouth, and therefore took the liberty, in process of time, of securing to their community certain possessions and stated revenues. Their principal function is to go from place to place, like the apostles, in order to convert sinners, and bring back transgressors into the paths of repentance and obedience [u].

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

The Regular Clerks of St. Maieul, who are also Clerks of called the fathers of Somasquo, from the place St. Maieu!. where their community was first established, and which was also the residence of their sounder, were erected into a distinct society by Jerome Æmiliani, a noble Venetian, and were afterwards successively confirmed, in the years 1540 and 1543, by the Roman pontiffs Paul III. and Pius IV. [w]. Their chief occupation was to instruct the ignorant, and particularly young persons, in the principles and precepts of the Christian religion, and to procure assistance for those who were reduced to the unhappy condition of orphans. The same important ministry was committed to the Fathers of the Christian doctrine in France and Italy. The order that bore this title in France was instituted by Cæsar de Bus, and confirmed in 1597 by Clement VIII. while that which is known in Italy under the same denomination, derived its origin from Mark Cusani, a Milanese knight, and was established by the approbation and authority of Pius V. and Gregory XIII.

[13] Helyot, tome iv. ch. xvi. p. 100.—In the same volume of his incomparable history, this learned author gives a mod accurate, ample, and interesting account of the other religious orders, which are here, for the sake of brevity, barely mentioned.

XVIII. It

[w] Alla Sanster. Februar. tom. ii. p. 217.

CENT.
XVI.

BECT. III.

PART I.

Other new religious communities.

XVIII. It would be an endless, and, indeed, an unprofitable labour to enumerate particularly the prodigious multitude of less considerable orders and religious associations, that were instituted in Germany and other countries, from an apprehension of the pretended heretics, who disturbed by their innovations the peace, or rather the lethargy, of the church. For certainly no age produced fuch a swarm of monks, and such a number of convents, as that in which Luther and the other reformers opposed the divine light and power of the gospel to ignorance, superstition, and papal tyranny. We therefore pass over in silence these less important establishments, of which many have been long buried in oblivion, because they were erected on unstable foundations, while numbers were suppressed by the wisdom of certain pontiffs, who considered the multitude of these communities rather as prejudicial than advantageous to the church. Nor can we take particular notice of the female convents, or nunneries, among which the Ursulines shone forth with a superior lustre both in point of number and dignity. The Priests of the Oratory, founded in Italy by Philip Neri, a native of Florence, and, publicly honoured with the protection of Gregory XIII. in the year 1577, must, however, be excepted from this general filence, on account of the eminent figure they made in the republic of letters. It was this community that produced Baronius, Raynaldus, and Laderchius, who hold so high a rank among the eccle-siastical historians of the sixteenth and following centuries; and there are still to be found in it men of considerable erudition and capacity. The name of this religious fociety was derived from an apartment, accommodated in the form of an Oratory [x], or cabinet for devotion, which St. Philip Neri built at Florence for himself, and in which, for many years, he held spiritual conferences with his more intimate companions [y].

CENT.

XIX. It is too evident to admit the least dis- The state of pute, that all kinds of erudition, whether facred learning. or profane, were held in much higher esteem in the western world since the time of Luther, than they had been before that auspicious period. 'The Jesuits, more especially, boast, and perhaps not without reason, that their society contributed more, at least in this century, to the culture of the languages, the improvement of the arts, and the advancement of true science, than all the rest of the religious orders. It is certain that the directors of schools and academies, either through indolence or design, persisted obstinately in their ancient method of teaching, though that method was intricate and disagreeable in many respects; nor would they suffer themselves to be better informed, or permit the least change in their uncouth and disgusting systems. The monks were not more remarkable than the academic teachers for their compliance with the growing taste for polished literature, nor did they feem at all disposed to admit, into the retreats of their gloomy cloisters, a more solid and elegant method of instruction than they had been formerly accustomed to. These facts furnish a rational account of the surprising variety that appears in the style and manner of the writers of this age, of whom feveral express their sentiments with elegance, perspicuity, and order, while the diction and style of a great

[r] Helyot, tome viii. ch. iv. p. 12.

<sup>[7]</sup> He was peculiarly assisted in these conferences by Baronius, author of the Ecclesiastical Annals, who also succeeded him as general of the order, and whose annals, on account of his imperfect knowledge of the Greek language, are so remarkably full of gross faults, misrepresentations, and blanders.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. part of their contemporaries are barbarous, perplexed, obscure, and insipid.

Cæsar Baronius, already mentioned, undertook to throw light on the history of religion by his annals of the Christian church; but this pretended light was scarcely any thing better than perplexity and darkness [z]. His example, however, excited many to enterprises of the same nature. attempts of the persons whom the Romanists called heretics, rendered indeed fuch enterprises necessary: for these heretics, with the learned Flacius and Chemnitz at their head [a], demonstrated with the utmost evidence, that not only the declarations of holy scripture, but also the testimony of ancient history and the records of the primitive church, were in direct opposition both to the doctrines and pretensions of the church of Rome. This was wounding popery with its own arms, and attacking it in its pretended strong-holds. It was, therefore, incumbent upon the friends of Rome to employ, while it was time, their most zealous efforts in maintaining the credit of those ancient fables, on which the greatest part of the papal authority reposed, as its only foundation and support.

The state of philosophy.

XX. Several men of genius in France and Italy, who have been already mentioned with the esteem that is due to their valuable labours [b], used of the Annals of Baronius, in an excellent work, entitled, Exercitationes, &c. and though he carried it no farther down than the 34th year of the Christian æra, yet he pointed out a prodigious number of palpable, and (many of them) shameful errors, into which the Romish annalist has fallen during that short space. Even the Roman-catholic literati acknowledge the inaccuracies and faults of Baronius; hence many learned men, such as Pagi, Nors, and Tillemont, have been employed to correct them. And accordingly, a few years ago, a new edition of these Annals appeared at Lucca, with the corrections of these reviewers at the foot of each.page.

[a] The former in the Centuria Magdeburgeuses; the latter

in his Examen Concilii Tridentini.

[b] See above, Sect. II.

their

their most zealous endeavours to reform the bar- CENT. barous philosophy of the times. But the excesfive attachment of the scholastic doctors to the PART I. Aristotelian philosophy on the one hand, and, on the other, the timorous prudence of many weak minds, who were apprehensive that the liberty of striking out new discoveries and ways of thinking might be prejudicial to the church, and open a new source of division and discord, crushed all these generous efforts. The throne of the subtile Stagirite remained therefore unshaken; and his philosophy, whose very obscurity afforded a certain gloomy kind of pleasure, and flattered the pride of such as were implicitly supposed to understand it, reigned unrivaled in the schools and monasteries. It even acquired new credit and authority from the Jesuits, who taught it in their colleges, and made use of it in their writings and disputes. this, however, these artful ecclesiastics shewed evidently, that the captious jargon and subtilties of that intricate philosophy were much more adapted to puzzle heretics, and to give the popilh doctors at least the appearance of carrying on the controversy with success, than the plain and obvious method of disputing, which is pointed out by the genuine and unbiassed dictates of right reason.

XXI. The church of Rome produced, in this Theological century, a prodigious number of theological wri- writers of The most eminent of these, in point of the Romish reputation and merit, were the following: Thomas de Vio, otherwise named cardinal Caietan,-Eckius,—Cochlæus,—Emser,—Surius,—Hosius,—Faber,—Sadolet,—Pighius,—Vatable,—Canus,—D'Espence,—Caranza,—Maldonatus,—Turrianus,—Arias Montanus,—Catharinus,— Reginald Pole, Sixtus Senensis, Cassander, CENT. XVI. der,—Paya d'Andrada,—Baius,—Pamelius, and others  $\lceil c \rceil$ .

The principles of the Roman (a-tholic faith.

XXII. The religion of Rome, which the pontiffs are so desirous of imposing upon the faith of all that bear the Christian name, is derived, according to the unanimous accounts of its doctors. from two fources, the written word of God, and the unwritten; or, in other words, from scripture and tradition. But as the most eminent divines of that church are far from being agreed concerning the persons who are authorised to interpret the declarations of these two oracles, and to determine their sense; so it may be afferted, with truth, that there is, as yet, no possibility of knowing with certainty what are the real doctrines of the church of Rome, or where, in that communion, the judge of religious controverly is to be found. It is true, the court of Rome, and all who favour the despotic pretensions of its pontiff, maintain, that he alone, who governs the church as Christ's vicegerent, is authorised to explain and determine the sense of scripture and tradition in matters pertaining to falvation, and that, of consequence, a devout and unlimited obedience is due to his decisions. To give weight to this opinion, Pius IV. formed the plan of a council, which was afterwards instituted and confirmed by Sixtus V. and called the Congregation for interpreting the decrees of the Council of Trent. This congregation was authorifed to examine and decide, in the name of the pope, all matters of small moment relating to ecclesiastical discipline, while every debate of importance, and particularly all disquisitions concerning points of faith and doctrine, were left to the decision of the pontist alone,

[e] For an ample account of the literary character, rank, and writings of these learned men, and of several others whose names are here omitted, see Louis Ell. Du Pin, Bibliotheque des Auteurs Ecclesiajiques, tom. xiv. and xvi.

Elone, as the great dracle of the church [d]. Not- CENT. withstanding all this, it was impossible to perfuade the wifer part of the Roman-catholic body to acknowledge this exclusive authority in their head. And accordingly, the greatest part of the Gallican church, and a confiderable number of very learned men of the popish religion in other countries, think very differently from the court of Rome on this subject. They maintain, that all bishops and doctors have a right to consult the sacred fountains of scripture and tradition, and to draw thence the rules of faith and manners for themselves and their flock; and that all difficult points and debates of consequence are to be referred to the cognizance and decision of general councils. Such is the difference of opinion (with respect to the adjustment of doctrine and controversy) that fall divides the church of Rome; and as no judge has been (and perhaps none can be) found to compose it, we may reasonably despair of seeing the religion of Rome acquire a permanent, stable, and determinate form.

XXIII. The council of Trent was affembled, The council 25 was pretended, to correct, illustrate, and fix of Trent. with perspicuity, the doctrine of the church, to reftore the vigour of its discipline, and to reform the lives of its ministers. But, in the opinion of those who examine things with impartiality, this affembly, instead of reforming ancient abuses, rather gave rise to new enormities; and many transactions of this council have excited the just complaints of the wifest men in both communions.

[d] See Aymon, Tableau de la Cour de Rome, part V. ch. iv. p. 282. Hence it was, that the approbation of Innocent XI. was refused to the artful and insidious work of Bossvet, bitop of Meaux, entitled, 'An Exposition of the Doctrine of the Catholic Church,' until the author had suppressed the first edition of that work, and made corrections and alterations in the second.

They

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. They complain that many of the opinions of the scholastic doctors on intricate points (that had formerly been left undecided, and had been wifely permitted as subjects of free debate) were, by this council, absurdly adopted as articles of faith, were recommended as such, and even imposed with violence upon the consciences of the people, under pain of excommunication. They complain of the ambiguity that reigns in the decrees and declarations of that council, by which the disputes and dissensions that had formerly rent the church, instead of being removed by clear definitions and wise and temperate decisions, were rendered, on the contrary, more perplexed and intricate, and were, in reality, propagated and multiplied instead of being suppressed or diminished. Nor were these the only reasons of complaint; for it must have been afflicting to those who had the cause of true religion and Christian liberty at heart, to see all things decided, in that affembly, according to the despotic will of the Roman pontiff, without any regard to the dictates of truth, or the authority of scripture, its genuine and authentic source, and to see the assembled fathers reduced to silence by the Roman legates, and deprived, by those insolent representatives of the papacy, of that influence and credit which might have rendered them capable of healing the wounds of the church It was moreover a grievance justly to be complained of, that the few wife and pious regulations that were made in that council, were never for ported by the authority of the church, but were fuffered to degenerate into a mere lifeless form, or shadow of law, which was treated with indifferent and transgressed with impunity. To sum up all one short sentence, the most candid and impartial fervers of things consider the council of Trent 21 assembly that was more attentive to what m maintain the despotic authority of the pos than folicitous about entering into the meafures that were necessary to promote the good sectime. of the church. It will not therefore appear surprising, that certain doctors of the Romish church, instead of submitting to the decisions of the council of Trent as an ultimate rule of faith, maintain, that these decisions are to be explained by the dictates of scripture and the language of tradition. Nor, when all these things are duly confidered, shall we have reason to wonder, that this council has not throughout the same degree of credit and authority, even in those countries that profess the Roman-catholic religion [e].

195

Some countries, indeed, such as Germany, Poland, and Italy, have adopted implicitly and abfolutely the decrees of this council, without the smallest restriction of any kind. But in other regions it has been received and acknowledged on certain conditions, which modify not a little its pretended authority. Among the latter we may reckon the Spanish dominions, which disputed, during many years, the authority of this council, and acknowledged it at length only fo far as it could be adopted without any prejudice to the rights and prerogatives of the king of Spain [f], In other countries, such as France [g] and Hungary [b], it never has been folemnly received, or

The translator has here inserted in the text the note [b] of the original, and has thrown the citations it contains nto different notes.

[f] See Giannone, Historia di Napoli, vol. iv.

[g] See Hect. Godofr. Masii Diff. de Contemptu Concilii Tridentini in Gallia, which is published among his other disfertations, collected into one volume. See also the excellent discourse which Dr. Courayer has subjoined to the second volume of his French translation of Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent, entitled, "Discours sur la Reception du "Coacile de Trente, particulierement en France," p. 775. 789.

<sup>[6]</sup> See Lorand: Samuelof, Vita Andr. Dudithii, p. 56.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PARTI.

publicly acknowledged. It is true, indeed, that, in the former of these kingdoms, such decrees of Trent as relate to points of religious doctrine, have, tacitly and imperceptibly, through the power of custom, acquired the force and authority of rules of faith; but those which regard external discipline, spiritual power, and ecclesiastical government, have been constantly rejected, both in a public and private manner, as inconsistent with the authority and prerogatives of the throne, and prejudicial to the rights and liberties of the Gallican church [i].

The principai heads of the Roman, Catholic religion.

XXIV. Notwithstanding all this, such as are desirous of forming some notion of the religion of Rome, will do well to consult the decrees of the council of Trent, together with the compendious confession of faith, which was drawn up by the order of Pius IV. Those, however, who expect to derive, from these sources, a clear, complete and perfect knowledge of the Romish faith, will be greatly disappointed. To evince the truth of this affertion, it might be observed, as has been already hinted, that both in the decrees of Trent, and in this papal confession, many things are expressed, designedly, in a vague and ambiguous manner, on account of the intestine divisions and warm debates that then reigned in the Another tingular circumstance might also be added, that several tenets are omitted in both, which no Roman-catholic is allowed to deny, or even to call in question. But, waving both these considerations, let it only be observed, that in these decrees and in this confession several doctrines and rules of worthip are inculcated in a

[i] See Louis El. Du Pin, Biblioth. des Auteurs Ecclefa-

fiques, tome xv. p. 380.

For what relates to the literary history of the council of Trent, to the historians who have transmitted accounts of it. and other circumstances of that nature, see Jo. Chr. Kecheri Bibliotheca Theol. Symbolica, p. 325. 377. as also Salig's Hiftory of the Council of Trent (in German), tom- iii. p. 190-320.

CENT. XVI.

much more rational and decent manner, than that in which they appear in the daily service of the church, and in the public practice of its members [k]. Hence we may conclude, that the justest notion of the doctrine of Rome is not to be derived so much from the terms used in the decrees of that council, as from the real signification of these terms, which must be drawn from the customs, institutions, and observances, that prevail in the Romish church. Add to all this, another consideration, which is, that in the bulls issued out from the papal throne in these latter times, certain doctrines, which were obscurely proposed in the council of Trent, have been explained with sufficient perspicuity, and avowed without either hesitation or reserve. Of this Clement XI. gave a notorious example, in the famous bull called Unigenitus, which was an enterprize as audacious as it proved unsuccessful.

know ledge:

XXV. As foon as the popes perceived the re- The flate of markable detriment which their authority had theology, or suffered from the accurate interpretations of the scriptureholy scriptures that had been given by the learned, and from the perusal of these divine oracles, which were now very frequently consulted by the people, they left no methods unemployed that might discourage the culture of this most important branch of facred erudition. While the tide of resentment ran high, they forgot themselves in the most unaccountable manner. They permitted their cham-

[k] This is true, in a more especial manner, with respect to the canons of the council of Trent, relating to the doctrine of purgatory, the invocation of faints, the worship of images and relics. The terms employed in these canons are artfully chosen, so as to avoid the imputation of idolatry, in the philosophical sense of that word; for, in the scripture sense, they cannot avoid it, as all use of images in religious worship is expressly forbidden in various parts of the sacred writings. this circumspection does not appear in the worship of the Roman-catholics, which is notoriously idolatrous in both senses of that word.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

pions to indulge themselves openly in reflections injurious to the dignity of the facred writings, and, by an excess of blasphemy almost incredible (if the passions of men did not render them capable of the greatest enormities) to declare publicly, that the edicts of the pontiffs, and the records of oral tradition, were superior, in point of authority, to the express language of the holy scriptures. As it was impossible, however, to bring the sacred writings wholly into disrepute, they took the most effectual methods in their power to render them obscure and useless. For this purpose the ancient Latin translation of the Bible, commonly called the Vulgate, though it abounds with innumerable gross errors, and, in a great number of places, exhibits the most shocking barbarity of style, and the most impenetrable obscurity with respect to the sense of the inspired writers, was declared, by a solemn decree of the council of Trent, an authentic, i. e. a faithful, accurate, and perfect [1] translation, and was consequently recommended as a

---

[/] If we consult the canons of the council of Trent, we shall find that the word authentic is there explained in terms less positive and offensive than those used by Dr. Mosbeim. Nor is it firstly true, that the Vulgate was declared by this council to be a production beyond the reach of criticism or censure; fince, as we learn from Fra. Paolo, it was determined that this version should be corrected, and a new edition of it published by persons appointed for that purpose *. There was, indeed, something highly ridiculous in the proceedings of the council in relation to this point; for, if the natural order of things had been observed, the revisal and correction of the Vulgate would have preceded the pompous approbation with which the council honoured, and, as it were, consecrated that ancient version. For how, with any shadow of good sense, could the assembled fathers fet the seal of their approbation to a work which they acknowledged to stand in need of correction, and that before they knew whether or not the correction would answer their views, and merit their approbation?

See Father Paul's History of the Conneil of Trent, book II. part LIII. and Dr. Courager's French translation of this History, vol. i. p. 284-284.

production beyond the reach of criticism or cenfure. It was easy to foresee that such a declaration was every way adapted to keep the people in ignorance, and to veil from their understandings the true meaning of the facred writings. In the fame council, farther steps were taken to execute, with success, the designs of Rome. A severe and intolerable law was enacted, with respect to all interpreters and expositors of the scriptures, by which they were forbidden to explain the sense of these divine books, in matters relating to faith and practice, in such a manner as to make them speak a different language from that of the church and the ancient doctors [m]. The same law farther declared, that the church alone (i. e. its ruler, the Roman pontiff) had the right of determining the true meaning and fignification of scripture. fill up the measure of these tyrannical and iniquitous preceedings, the church of Rome persisted obstinately in affirming, though not always with the same impudence and plainness of speech, that the holy scriptures were not composed for the use of the multitude, but only for that of their spiritual teachers; and, of consequence, ordered these divine records to be taken from the people in all places where it was allowed to execute its imperious commands  $\lceil n \rceil$ .

XXVI. These circumstances had a visible in- commentafluence upon the spirit and productions of the tors and encommentators and expositors of scripture, which the holy the example of Luther and his followers had scriptures.

[m] It is remarkable, that this prohibition extends even to fuch interpretations as were not designed for public view: "Etiamii hujusmodi interpretationes nullo unquam tempore in "lucem edendæ forent." Sessio 4ta, tit. cap. ii.

<sup>[8]</sup> The papal emissaries were not suffered to execute this despotic order in all countries that acknowledged the jurisdiction of the church of Rome. The French and some other nations have the Bible in their mother-tongue, in which they peruse it. though much against the will of the creatures of the pope.

CENT. XVI. FECT. III. PART I.

rendered, through emulation, extremely numerous. The populh doctors, who vied with the protestants in this branch of sacred erudition, were insipid, timorous, servilely attached to the glory and interests of the court of Rome, and discovered, in their explications, all the marks of flavish dependence and constraint. They seem to have been in constant terror lest any expression should escape from their pen that savoured of opinions different from what were commonly received; they appeal every moment to the de-clarations and authority of the holy fathers, as they usually style them; nor do they appear to have so much consulted the real doctrines taught by the facred writers, as the language and fentiments which the church of Rome has taken the Several of liberty to put into their mouths. these commentators rack their imaginations in order to force out of each passage of scripture the four kinds of significations, called Literal, Allegorical, Tropological, and Anagogical, which ignorance and superstition had first invented, and afterwards held so sacred, in the explication of the inspired writings. Nor was their attachment to this manner of interpretation unskilfully managed, fince it enabled them to make the facred writers speak the language that was favourable to the views of the church, and to draw out of the Bible, with the help of a little subtilty, whatever doctrine they wished to impose upon the credulity of the multitude.

It must, however, be acknowledged, that, besides these miserable commentators whose efforts dishonour the church of Rome, there were some in its communion, who had wisdom enough to despise such sensels methods of interpretation, and who, avoiding all mysterious significations and fancies, followed the plain, natural, and literal sense of the expressions used in the hely scriptures. In this class the most eminent were, Erasmus of Rotterdam, CENT. who translated into Latin, with an elegant and section. faithful simplicity, the books of the New Testa. PART ment, and explained them with judgment in a paraphrase which is deservedly esteemed; cardinal Caietan, who disputed with Luther at Augsburg, and who gave a brief, but judicious exposition of almost all the books of the Old and New Testament; Francis Titelman, Isidorus Clarius, and John Maldonat, besides Benedict Justinian, who acquired no mean reputation by his commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul. To these may be added Gagny, D'Espence, and other expositors [0]. But these eminent men, whose example was so adapted to excite emulation, had very few followers; and, in a short time, their influence was gone, and their labours were forgotten. For, towards the conclusion of this century, Edmund Richer, that strenuous opposer of the encroachments made by the pontiffs on the liberties of the Gallican church, was the only doctor in the university of Paris who followed the literal sense and the plain and natural fignification of the words of scripture; while all the other commentators and interpreters, imitating the pernicious example of feveral ancient expositors, were always racking their brains for mysterious and sublime significations, where none fuch either were, or could be, designed by the facred writers [p].

XXVII. The feminaries of learning were filled, The state of before the reformation, with that subtile kind of didactic theology. theological doctors, commonly known under the denomination of schoolmen; so that even at Paris, which was considered as the principal seat of sacred erudition, no doctors were to be found who were capable of disputing with the protestant divines in

[o] See Simon's Hift. Critique du Vicux et du Nouv. Testament.

[p] See Baillet's Vie d'Edmund Richer, p 9, 10.

CENT. XVI. $ECT. III. PART I. the method they generally pursued, which was that of proving the doctrines they maintain by arguments drawn from the Holy Scriptures and the writings of the fathers. This uncommon scarcity of didactic and scriptural divines produced much confusion and perplexity, on many occasions, even in the council of Trent; where the scholastic doctors fatigued some, and almost turned the heads of others, by examining and explaining the doctrines that were there proposed, according to the intricate and ambiguous rules of their captious philosophy. Hence it became absolutely necessary to reform the methods of proceeding in theological disquisitions, and to restore to its former credit that practice which drew the truths of religion more from the dictates of the facred writings, and from the sentiments of the ancient doctors, than from the uncertain suggestions of human reason, and the ingenious conjectures of philosophy [q]. It was,

[q] See Du Boulay's account of the reformation of the theological faculty at Paris, in his Hist. Acad. Paris. tom. vi. p. 790. In this reform the bachelors of divinity, called Sententiarii and Biblici, are particularly distinguished; and (what is extremely remarkable) the Augustine monks. who were Luther's fraternity, are ordered to furnish the college of divinity once a year with a scriptural bachelor (Eaccalaureum Biblicum prasentare;) whence we may conclude, that the monks of the Augustine order, to which Luther belonged, were much more conversant in the fludy of the Scriptures than the other monastic societies. But this academical law deserves to be quoted here at length, so much the more, as Du Boulay's History is in sew hands. It is as follows: " Augustinenses quolibet anno Biblicum præsentabunt, secundum statutum sol. 21, quod sequitur: Quii libet ordo Mendicantium et Collegium S. Bernardi habeant quolibet anno Biblicum qui legat ordinarie, alioqui priventur pro illo anno Baccalaureo fententiario." It appears by this law, that each mendicant order was, by a decree of the theological faculty, obliged to furnish, yearly, a scriptural bachelor (fuch was Luther); and yet we see, that in the reformation already mentioned, this obligation is imposed upon none but the Augustine monks. We may therefore presume that the · Domihowever, impossible to deprive entirely the scho- cent. lastic divines of the ascendency which they had XVI. acquired in the seminaries of learning, and had so ART I. long maintained almost without opposition; for, after having been threatened with a diminution of their authority, they seemed to resume new vi-gour from the time that the Jesuits adopted their philosophy, and made use of their subtile dialectic, as a more effectual armour against the attacks of the heretics, than either the language of scripture, or the authority of the fathers. And, indeed, the scholastic jargon was every way proper to answer the purposes of a set of men, who found it necessary to puzzle and perplex, where they could neither refute with perspicuity, nor prove with evidence. Thus they artfully con-cealed their defeat, and retreated, in the dazzled eyes of the multitude, with the appearance of victory [r].

The Mystics lost almost all their credit in the church of Rome after the Reformation, partly on account of the favourable reception they found among the Protestants, and partly in consequence of their pacific system, which, giving them an aversion to controversy in general, rendered them little disposed to defend the papal cause against its numerous and formidable adversaries. These enthusiasts however were, in some measure, tolerated in the church of Rome, and allowed to include themselves in their philosophical speculations, on certain conditions, which obliged them to abstain from censuring either the laws or the corruptions of the church, and from declaiming, Dominicans, Franciscans, and the other mendicants, had entirely neglected the study of the Scriptures, and consequently had among them no scriptural bachelors; and that the Augustine monk alone were in a condition to satisfy the demands of the theological faculty.

[r] The translator has added the two last sentences of this paragraph, to illustrate more fully the sense of the author.

with

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART I.

The state of morality and practical religion.

with their usual freedom and vehemence, against the vanity of external worship, and the dissensions of jarring and contentious doctors.

XXVIII. There fuccessful attempt was no made, in this century, to correct or improve the practical or moral system of doctrine that was followed in the church of Rome; nor, indeed, could any one make fuch an attempt without drawing upon himself the displeasure, and perhaps the fury, of the papal hierarchy. For, in reality, such a project of reformation seemed in no wife conducive to the interests of the church, as these interests were understood by its ambitious and rapacious rulers. And it is undoubtedly certain, that many doctrines and regulations, on which the power, opulence, and grandeur of that church essentially depended, would have run the risque of falling into discredit and contempt, if the pure and rational system of morality, contained in the gospel, had been exhibited in its native beauty and fimplicity, to the view and perusal of all Christians without distinction. Little or no zeal was therefore exerted in amending or improving the doctrines that immediately relate to practice. On the contrary, many persons of eminent piety and integrity, in the communion of Rome, have grievously complained (with what justice shall be shewn in its proper place) [s], that, as foon as the Jesuits had gained an ascendency in the courts of princes, and in the schools of learning, the cause of virtue began visibly to decline. It has been alleged, more particularly, that this artful order employed all the force of subtile distinctions to sap the foundations of morality, and, in process of time, opened a door to all forts of licentiousness and iniquity, by the loose and dissolute rules of conduct which they propagated as far as their influence extended,

广门 See Cent. XVII. Sect. II. Part I. Chap. I. Sect. XXXIV.

extended. This poisonous doctrine spread, indeed, its contagion, in a latent manner, during the fixteenth century; but, in the following age, its abettors ventured to expose some specimens of its turpitude to public view, and thus gave occasion to great commotions in several parts of Europe.

All the moral writers of the Romish church, in this century, may be distinguished into three classes, the Schoolmen, the Dogmatists [t], and the Mystics. The first explained, or rather obscured, the virtues and duties of the Christian life, by knotty distinctions and unintelligible forms of fpeech, and buried them under an enormous load of arguments and demonstrations: the second illustrated them from the declarations of scripture, and the opinions of the ancient doctors; while the third placed the whole of morality in the tranquillity of a mind withdrawn from all fensible objects, and habitually employed in the contemplation of the divine nature.

XXIX. The number of combatants that the The Sale pontiffs brought into the field of controversy, during controversy. this century, was prodigious, and their glaring defects are abundantly known. It may be faid, with truth, of the greater part of them, that, like many warriors of another class, they generally lost fight of all considerations, except those of victory and plunder. The disputants, whom the order of Jesuits sent forth in great number against the adversaries of the church of Rome, surpassed all the rest in subtilty, impudence, and invective. The principal leader and champion of the polemic tribe was Robert Bellarmine, a Jesuit, and a member of the college of cardinals, who treated, in several bulky volumes, of all the controversies that sub-

The reader will easily perceive, by the short account of these three classes, given by Dr. Mosheim, that the word Dozmatist must not be taken in that magisterial sense which it bears in modern language. fisted

CENT.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART 1. fisted between the Protestants and the church of Rome, and whose merit as a writer consisted, principally, in clearness of style, and a certain copiousness of argument, which shewed a rich and fruitful imagination. This eminent defender of the church of Rome arose about the conclusion of this century, and, on his first appearance, all the force and attacks of the most illustrious protestant doctors were turned against him alone. His candour and plain-dealing exposed him, however, to the cenfures of feveral divines of his own communion; for he collected, with diligence, the reasons and objections of his adversaries, and proposed them, for the most part, in their full force, with integrity and exactness. Had he been less remarkable for his fidelity and industry; had he taken care to select the weakest arguments of his antagonists, and to render them still weaker, by proposing them in an imperfect and unfaithful light, his fame would have been much greater among the friends of Rome than it actually is [u].

The controversies that divide the church of Rome.

XXX. If we turn our view to the internal state of the church of Rome, and consider the respective sentiments, opinions, and manners of its different members, we shall find that, not with standing its boasted unity of faith, and its oftentatious pretensions to harmony and concord, it was, in the sixteenth century, and is, at this day, divided and distracted with dissensions and contests of various kinds. The Franciscans and the Dominicans contend with vehenence about several points of doctrine and discipline. The Scotists and Thomists are at eternal war. The bishops have never ceased disputing with the pontiff (and with the congregations that he has instituted to maintain his pretensions) upon the origin and precise limits of his authority CENT. and jurisdiction. The French and Flemings, with the inhabitants of other countries, openly oppose the Roman pontiff on many occasions, and refuse to acknowledge his supreme and unlimited dominion in the church; while, on the other hand, he still continues to encroach upon their privileges, sometimes with violence and resolution, when he can do so with impunity, at other times with circumspection and prudence, when vigorous measures appear dangerous or unnecessary. The Jesuits, who, from their first rise, had formed the project of diminishing the credit and influence of all the other religious orders, used their warmest endeavours to share with the Benedictines and other monasteries, which were richly endowed, a part of their opulence; and their endeavours were crowned with fuccess. Thus they drew upon their fociety the indignation and vengeance of the other religious communities, and armed against it the monks of every other denomination; and, in a more especial manner, the Benedictines and Dominicans, who surpassed all its enemies in the keenness and bitterness of their resentment. The rage of the Benedictines is animated by reflecting on the possessions of which they have been deprived; while the Dominicans contend for the honour of their order, the privileges annexed to it, and the religious tenets by which it is distinguished. Nor are the theological colleges and seminaries of learning more exempt from the flame of controversy than the clerical and monastic orders: on the contrary, debates concerning almost all the doctrines of Christianity are multiplied in them, and conducted with little moderation.

[u] See Mayer's Ecloga de side Baronii et Bellarmini ipsis pontisseiis dubia, published at Amsterdam in 8vo, in 1698,

207

It is true, indeed, that all these contests are tempered and managed, by the prudence and authority of the Roman pontiffs, in such a manner as to prevent their being carried to an excessive

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. cessive height, to a length that might prove satal to the church, by destroying that phantom of external unity that is the source of its consistence as an ecclesiastical body: I say tempered and managed; for, to heal entirely these divisions, and calm these animosities, however it may be judged an undertaking worthy of one who calls himself the Vicar of Christ, is, nevertheless, a work beyond the power, and contrary to the intention, of the Roman pontiff.

The more momentous controver-fies that have divided the church of Rome.

XXXI. Besides these debates of inferior moment, which made only a slight breach in the tranquillity and union of the church of Rome, there arose, after the period in which the council of Trent was assembled, controversies of much greater importance, which deservedly attracted the attention of Christians of all denominations. These controversies were set on foot by the Jesuits, and from small beginnings have increased gradually, and gathered strength; so that the slame they produced has been transmitted even to our times, and continues, at this very day, to divide the members of the Romish church in a manner that does not a little endanger its stability. While the Roman pontiffs foment, perhaps, instead of endeavouring to extinguish, the less momentous disputes mentioned above, they observe a different conduct with respect to those now under confideration. The most zealous efforts of artifice and authority are constantly employed to calm the contending parties (fince it appears impossible to unite and reconcile them), and to diminish the violence of commotion, which they can scarcely ever hope entirely to suppress. All their exertions, however, have hitherto been ineffectual. They have not been able to calm the agitation and vehemence with which these debates are carried on, or to inspire any sentiments of moderation and mutual forbearance into minds, which

CENT.

which are less animated by the love of truth, than

by the spirit of faction.

XXXII. Whoever will look with attention and ra impartiality into these controversies may easily Two general perceive that there are two parties in the Romish chasses of church, whose notions with respect both to doctrine the church and discipline are extremely different. The Jesuits, of Rome. confidered as a body [w], maintain, with the greatest zeal and obstinacy, the ancient system of doctrine and manners, which pervaded the church before the rise of Luther, and which, though absurd and ill-digested, the zealots have constantly considered as highly favourable to the views of Rome, and the grandeur of its pontiffs. These sagacious ecclesiastics, whose peculiar office it is to watch for the security and defence of the papal throne, are fully persuaded that the authority of the pontiffs, the opulence, pomp, and grandeur of the clergy, depend entirely upon the preservation of the ancient forms of doctrine; and that every project that tends either to remove these forms, or even to correct them, must be, in the highest degree, detrimental to what they call the interests of the church, and gradually bring on its ruin. On the other hand, there are within the pale of the Roman church, especially since the dawn of the Reformation, many pious and well-meaning men, whose eyes have been opened, by the perusal of the inspired and primitive writers, upon the corruptions and defects of the received forms of doctrine and discipline. Comparing the distates of primitive Christianity with the vulgar system of popery, they have found the latter full of enormities, and have always been desirous of a reform (though indeed a partial one, according to their particular fancies), that thus the church may be purified from those unhappy abuses that have given rise to such mischievous divisions, and still draw upon it the censures and reproaches of the heretics.

The Jesuits are here taken in the general and collective sense of that denomination: because there are several individuals of that order, whose sentiments differ from those which generally prevail in their community.

XVI.
SECT. III.

The main controverties that divide, the church of Rome, reduced to fix beads. First subject of debate.

From these opposite ways of thinking, arose naturally the warmest contentions and debates between the Jesuits and many doctors of the church of Rome. These debates may be reduced under the six following heads.

The first subject of debate concerns the limits and extent of the power and jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff. The Jesuits, with their numerous tribe of followers and dependents, maintain, that the pope is infallible;—that he is the only visible fource of that universal and unlimited power which Christ has granted to the church;—that all bishops and subordinate rulers derive from him alone the authority and jurisdiction with which they are invested;—that he is not bound by any laws of the church, nor by any decrees of the councils that compose it;—that he alone is the supreme legislator of that facred community,—and that it is in the highest degree criminal to oppose or disobey his edicts and commands. Such are the strange sentiments of the Jesuits; but they are very far from being universally adopted. For other members of the church of Rome hold, on the contrary, that the pope is liable to error;—that his authority is inferior to that of a general council;—that he is bound to obey the commands of the church, and its laws, as they are enacted in the councils that represent it; —that thesé councils have a right to depose him from the papal chair, when he abuses, in a flagrant manner, the dignity and prerogatives with which he is intrusted;—and that, in consequence of these principles, the bishops and inferior rulers rulers and doctors derive the authority that is annexed to their respective dignities, not from the pontiff, but from Christ himself.

CENT.

debate.

XXXIII. The extent and prerogatives of the church form the second subject of debate. The Jesuits subject of and their adherents stretch out its borders far and wide. They not only comprehend, within its large circuit, many who live separate from the communion of Rome[x], but even extend the inheritance of eternal falvation to nations that have not the least knowledge of the Christian religion, or of its divine Author, and confider as true members of the church open transgressors, who outwardly profess its doctrines. But the adversaries of the Jesuits reduce within narrower limits the kingdom of Christ, and not only exclude from all hope of salvation those who are not within the pale of the church of Rome, but also those who, though they live within its external communion, yet dishonour their profession by a vicious and profligate course of life. The Jesuits moreover (not to mention differences of less moment) assert, that the church can never pronounce an erroneous or unjust decifion, either relating to matters of fact, or points of doctrine [y]; while the adverse party declare, that,

[x] They were accused at Spoleto, in the year 1653, of having maintained, in their public instructions, the probability of the salvation of many heretics. See Le Clerc, Biblioth. Univers. et Historique, tome xiv. p. 3:0.

This distinction with respect to the objects of infallibility, chiefly arose from the following historical circum-Rance: Pope Innocent X. condemned five propositions, drawn from the famous book of Jansenius, entitled Augustinus. This condemnation occasioned the two following questions: 1st, Whether these propositions were erroneous? This was the question de jure, i. e. as the translator has rendered it, the question respecting doctrine. 2d, Whether these propositions were really taught by Jansenius? This was the question de fatto, i. e. relating to the matter of fact. The church was supposed, by some, infallible only in deciding questions of the former kind.

CENT. XVI.

The chiral fubject of debate.

in judging of matters of fact, it is not secured against all possibility of erring.

XXXIV. In the third class of controversies, that divide the church of Rome, are comprehended the debates relating to the nature, efficacy, and necessity of divine grace, together with those that concern original fin, the natural power of man to obey the laws of God, and the nature and foundation of those eternal decrees that have for their object the salvation of men. The Dominicans, Augustinians, and Jansenists, with several other doctors of the church, adopt the following propositions: That the impulse of divine grace cannot be opposed or refisted;—that there are no remains of purity or goodness in human nature since its fall;—that the eternal decrees of God, relating to the salvation of men, are neither founded upon, nor attended with, any condition whatfoever;—that God wills the falvation of all mankind: and they hold several other tenets that are connected with these. The Jesuits maintain, on the contrary, that the natural deminion of sin in the human mind, and the hidden corruption it has produced in our internal frame, are less general and dreadful than they are reprefented by the doctors now mentioned;—that buman nature is far from being deprived of all power of doing good;—that the succours of grace are administered to all mankind in a measure sufficient to lead them to eternal life and falvation;—that the operations of grace offer no violence to the faculties and powers of nature, and therefore may be refifted;—and that God from all eternity has appointed everlasting rewards and punishments, as the portion of men in a future world, not by an absolute, arbitrary, and unconditional decree, but in confequence of that divine and unlimited prescience, by which he foresaw the actions, merits, and characters, of every individual.

XXXV. The

XXXV. The fourth head, in this division of the controversies that destroy the pretended unity of the church of Rome, contains various subjects of PART L debate, relative to doctrines of morality and rules The fourth of practice, which it would be both tedious and subject of foreign from our purpose to enumerate in a circumstantial manner, though it may not be improper to touch lightly the first principles of this endless controverly [z].

The fourth

The Jesuits and their followers have inculcated a very strange doctrine with respect to the motives that determine the moral conduct and actions of men. They represent it as a matter of perfect indifference from what motives men obey the laws of God, provided these laws are really obeyed; and maintain, that the service of those who obey from the fear of punishment is as agreeable to the Deity, as are those actions which proceed from a principle of love to him and to his laws. This decision excites the horror of the greatest part of the doctors of the Roman [3] No author has given a more accurate, precise, and clear enumeration of the objections that have been made to the moral doctrine of the Jesuits, and the reproaches that have been cast on their rules of life; and no one at the same time has defended their cause with more art and dexterity than the eloquent and ingenious Gabriel Daniel (a famous member of their order), in a piece, entitled, Entretiens de Cleandre et d'Eudexe. This dialogue is to be found in the first volume of his Opufsules, p. 351, and was intended as an answer to the celebrated Provincial Letters of Pascal, which did more real prejudice to the fociety of the Jesuits than many would imagine, and expoled their loofe and perfidious systems of morals with the greatest fidelity and perspicuity, embellished by the most exquifite strokes of humour and irony. Father Daniel, in the piece above-mentioned, treats with great acuteness the famous doctrine of probability, p. 351: the method of directing our intentions, p. 556; equivocation and mental refervation, p. 562; Ins of ignorance and oblivion, p. 719; and it must be acknowledged, that, if the cause and pretensions of the Jesuits were inceptible of defence or plausibility, they have found in this writer an able and dexterous champion.

church,

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. church, who affirm, that no acts of obedience, that do not proceed from the love of God, can be acceptable to that pure and holy Being. Nor is the doctrine of the Jesuits only chargeable with the corrupt tenets already mentioned. They maintain farther, that a man never fins, properly speaking, but when he transgresseth a divine law, which is fully known to him, which is present to his mind while he acts, and of which he understands the true meaning and intent. And they hence conclude, that, in strict justice, the conduct of that transgressor cannot be looked upon as criminal, who is either ignorant of the law, or is in doubt about its true. fignification, or loses fight of it, through forgetfulness, at the time that he violates it. From these propositions they deduce the famous doctrines of probability and philosophical sin, that have cast an eternal reproach upon the schools of the Jesuits [a]. Their adversaries behold these pernicious tenets with the utmost abhorrence, and affert that neither ignorance, nor forgetfulness of the law, nor the doubts that may be entertained with respect to its fignification, will be admitted as sufficient to justify transgressors before the tribunal of God. contest, about the main and fundamental points of morality, has given rise to a great variety of debates concerning the duties we owe to God, our [a] The doctrine of probability consists in this: That an opinion or precept may be followed with a good conscience, when it is inculcated by four, or three, or two, or even by one doctor of considerable reputation, even though it be contrary to the judgment of the person who follows it, and even of him that recommends it.' This doctrine rendered the Jesuits capable of accommodating themselves to all the different passions of men, and to persons of all tempers and characters, from the most austere to the most licentious. Philosophical fin (according to the Jesuits' doctrine) is an action, or course of actions, repugnant to the dictates of reason, and yet not offenfive to the Deity. See a more particular account of these two odious doctrines in the following part of this work, cent. XVII. Sect. II. Part I. Chap. I. Sect. XXXV. and in the author's and translator's notes.

neigh-

neighbour, and ourselves; and produced two sects of moral teachers, whose animosities and divisions have miserably rent the church of Rome in all parts of the world, and involved it in the greatest perplexities.

XXXVI. The administration of the sacraments, The 66th especially those of penance and the eucharist, forms subject of the fifth subject of controversy in the church of Rome. The Jesuits and many other doctors are of opinion, that the falutary effects of the facraments are produced by their intrinsic virtue and immediate operation [b] upon the mind at the time they are administered, and that consequently it requires little preparation to receive them to edification and comfort; nor do they think that God requires a mind adorned with inward purity, and a heart animated with divine love, in order to the obtaining of the ends and purposes of these religious institutions. And hence it is, that according to their doctrine, the priests are empowered to give immediate absolution to all such as confess their transgressions and crimes, and afterwards to admit them to the use of the sacraments. But such sentiments are rejected with indignation by all those of the Romish communion who have the progress of vital and practical religion truly at heart. These [b] This is the only expression that occurred to the translator, as proper to render the true sense of that phrase of the scholastic divines, who say, that the sacraments produce their effect opere operato. The Jesuits and Dominicans maintain that the sacraments have in themselves an instrumental and efficient power, by virtue of which they work in the foul' (independently of its previous preparation or propenfities) a disposition to receive the divine grace; and this is what is commonly called the opus operatum of the facraments. Thus, according to their doctrine, neither knowledge, wildom, humility, faith, nor devotion, are necessary to the efficacy of the facraments, whose victorious energy nothing but a mortal fin can resist. See Dr. Courayer's Translation of Paul Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent, tom. i.

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. III.
PART I.

look upon it as the duty of the clergy to use the greatest diligence and assiduity in examining the characters, tempers, and actions of those who demand absolution and the use of the sacraments, before they grant their requests; since, in their sense of things, the real benefits of these institutions can extend to those only whose hearts are carefully purged from the corruptions of iniquity, and filled with that divine love that casteth out fear-Hence arose that famous dispute in the church of Rome, concerning a frequent approach to the holy communion, which was carried on with such warmth in the last (the seventeenth) century, between the Jesuits and the Jansenists, with Arnauld [c] at the head of the latter, and has been renewed in our times by the Jesuit Pichon, who thereby incurred the indignation of the greatest part of the French bishops [d]. The frequent celebration of the Lord's supper is one of the main duties, which the Jesuits recommend with peculiar earnestness to all who are under their spiritual direction, representing it as the most certain and infallible method of appealing the Deity, and obtaining from him the entire remission of their sins and transgressions. This manner of proceeding the Jansenists centure with their usual severity; and it is also condemned by many other learned and pious doctors of the Romish communion, who reject the intrinsic virtue and efficient operation which are attributed to the facraments, and wifely maintain, that the facrament of the Lord's supper can be profitable to those only whose minds are prepared, by faith, repentance, and the love of God, for that solemn tervice.

[d] See Journal Universel, tome xiii. p. 148. tome xv.

p. 363. tome xvi. p. 1:4.

XXXVII. The

[c] Arnauld published, on this occasion, his famous book concerning the Practice of communicating frequently. The French title is, 'Traité de la frequente Communion.'

CENT.

XXXVII. The fixth (or last) controversy turns upon the proper method of instructing Christians in the truths and precepts of religion. One part of the Romish doctors, who have the progress of religion truly at heart, deem it expedient, and even subject of necessary to sow the seeds of divine truth in the mind, in the tender and flexible state of infancy, when it is most susceptive of good impressions, and to give it, by degrees, according to the measure of its capacity, a full and accurate knowledge of the doctrines and duties of religion. Others, who have a greater zeal for the interests of the church than the improvement of its members, recommend a devout ignorance to fuch as submit to their direction, and think a Christian sufficiently instructed when he has learned to yield a blind and unlimited obedience to the orders of the church. The former are of opinion, that nothing can be so profitable and instructive to Christians as the study of the Scriptures, and consequently judge it highly expedient that they should be translated into the vulgar tongue of each country. The latter exclude the people from the satisfaction of consulting the facred oracles of truth, and look upon all vernacular translations of the Bible as dangerous, and even of a pernicious tendency. They accordingly maintain, that it ought only to be published in a learned language to prevent its instructions from becoming familiar to the multitude. The former compose pious and instructive books to nourish a spirit of devotion in the minds of Christians, to enlighten their ignorance, and dispel their errors; they illustrate and explain the public prayers and the folemn acts of religion in the language of the people, and exhort all, who attend to their instructions, to peruse constantly these pious productions, in order to improve their knowledge, purify their affections, and learn the method of worshiping the Deity in a rational and acceptable manner. All this,

CENT. this, however, is highly displeasing to the latter KILL kind of doctors, who are always apprehensive, TART is that the blind obedience and implicit submission of the people will diminish in proportion as their views are enlarged, and their knowledge increased [e].

The disputes carried on with Bains concerning grace, &c.

XXXVIII. All the controversies that have been here mentioned did not break out at the same time. The disputes concerning divine grace, the natural power of man to perform good actions, original fin, and predestination, which have been ranged under the third class, were publicly carried on in the century of [e] The account here given of the more momentous controversies that divide the church of Rome, may be confirmed, illustrated and enlarged, by consulting a multitude of books published in the last and present centuries, especially in France and Flanders, by Jansenists, Dominicans, Jesuits, and others. All the productions, in which the doctrine and precepts of the Jesuits, and the other creatures of the Roman pontiff, are opposed and refuted, are enumerated by Dominic Colonia, a French Jesuit, in a work published in 1735, under the following title: "Bibliotheque Janseniste, ou Catalogue Alphabetique des principaux livres Jansenistes, ou suspects de Jansenimse, avec des notes critiques." This writer is led into many abfurdities by his extravagant attachment to the Roman pontiff, and to the cause and tenets of his order. His book, however, is of use in pointing out the various controversies that perplex and divide the church of Rome. It was condemned by page Benedict XIV. but was republished in a new form, with some change in the title, and additions, that swelled it from one octavo volume to four of the same size. This new edition appeared at Antwerp in the year 1752, under the following title: "Dictionaire des livres Jansenistes, ou qui favorisent le Jansenisme, à Anvers, chez J. B. Verdussen. And it must be acknowledged, that it is extremely useful, in shewing the intestine divisions of the church, the particular contests that divide its doctors, the religious tenets of the Jesuits, and the numerous productions that relate to the fix heads of cortroversy here mentioned. It must be observed, at the same time, that this work abounds with the most malignant invectives against many persons of eminent learning and piety, and with the most notorious instances of partiality and injustice *.

See a particular account of this learned and scandalous work in the first and froud volumes of the "Bibliotheque des Sciences et des Books Arts," printed at the Hague.

of which we are now writing. The others were conducted with more secrecy and reserve, and did not come forth to public view before the following age. Nor will this appear at all furprifing to those who consider that the controversies concerning grace and free-will, which had been fet in motion by Luther, were neither accurately examined, nor peremptorily decided in the church of Rome, but were rather artfully suspended and hushed into filence. The sentiments of Luther were indeed condemned; but no fixed and perspicuous rule of faith, with respect to these disputed points, was substituted in their place. The decisions of St. Augustin were solemnly approved; but the points of diffimilitude, between these decisions and the sentiments of Luther, were never clearly explained. This fatal controversy originated in the zeal of Michael Baius, a doctor in the university of Louvain, equally remarkable on account of the warmth of his piety and the extent of his learning. This eminent divine, like the other followers of Augustin, had an invincible aversion to that contentious, subtile, and intricate manner of teaching theology, that had long prevailed in the fchools; and under the auspicious name of that famous prethe, who was his darling guide, he had the courage or temerity to condemn and censure, in an open and public manner, the tenets commonly received in the church of Rome, in relation to the natural powers of man, and the merit of good works. This bold step drew upon Baius the indignation of some of his academical colleagues, and the heavy censures of several Franciscan monks. Whether the Jesuits immediately joined in this opposition, and may be reckoned among the first accusers of Baius, is a point unknown, or uncertain; but it is unquestionably evident, that, even at the rife of this controverfy, they abhorred the principal tenets of Baius, which he had taken from Augustin, and adopted as his own. In the year 1567, this doctor was accused at the court of Rome; and seventy-six propositions, drawn from his writings, were condemned by Pius V. in a circular letter expressly composed for that purpose. This condemnation, however, was issued in an artful and insidious manner, without any mention of the name of the author; for the fatal consequences that had arisen from the rash and inconsiderate measures employed by the court of Rome against Luther, were too fresh in the remembrance of the prudent pontiff to permit his falling into new blunders of the same nature. The thunder of excommunication was therefore suppressed by the dictates of prudence, and the person and functions of Baius were spared, while his tenets were censured. About thirteen years after this transaction, Gregory XIII. complied so far with the importunate solicitations of a Jesuit, named Francis Tolet, as to reinforce the fentence of Pius V. by a new condemnation of the opinions of the Flemish doctor. Baius submitted to this new sentence, either from an apprehension that it would be followed by severer proceedings in case of resistance, or, which is more probable, on account of the ambiguity of the papal edict, and the vague and confused manner in which the obnoxious propositions were therein expressed. But his example, in this respect, was not followed by the other doctors who had formed their theological system upon that of Augustin  $\lceil f \rceil$ ; and, even at this day, many divines

History of the Roman or Latin Church.

[f] See, for an account of the disputes relating to Baius, the works of that author, published in 4to, at Cologne, in 1696, particularly the second part, or appendix, entitled, "Baiana, seu scripta, quæ controversias spectant occasione sententiarum Baii exortas." Bayle's Diction. at the article Baius, in which there is an ample and circumstantial account of these disputes. Du Pin, Bibliotheque des Auteurs Ecclesastiques, tome xvi. p. 144. Histoire de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome zii. p. 161.

divines of the Romish communion, and particularly the Jansenists, declare openly that Baius was unjustly treated, and that the two edicts of Pius and Gregory, mentioned above, are absolutely destitute of all authority, and have never been received as

CENT.

laws of the church [g].

XXXIX. Be that as it may, it is at least certain, Contest with the Jesuite, that the doctrine of Augustin, with respect to the Lessus and nature and operations of divine grace, lost none of Hamelius. its credit in consequence of these edicts, but was embraced and propagated, with the same zeal as formerly, throughout all the Belgic provinces, and more especially in the two flourishing universities of Louvain and Douay. This appeared very soon after, when two Jesuits, named Lessius and Hamelius, ventured to represent the doctrine of predestination in a manner different from that in which it appears in the writings of Augustin: for the sentiments of these Jesuits were publicly condemned by the doctors of Louvain in the year 1587, and by those of Douay the year following. The bishops of the Low Countries were disposed to follow the example of these two universities, and had already deliberated about assembling a provincial council for this purpose, when pope Sixtus V. suspended the proceedings by the interpolition of his authority, and declared, that the cognizance and decision of religious controversies belonged only to the vicar of Christ, residing at Rome. But this politic vicar, whose fagacity, prudence, and knowlege of men and things, never failed him in transactions of this nature, wifely avoided making use of the privilege he claimed with such confidence, that he might not

inflame

[g] This is demonstrated fully by an anonymous writer, in a piece entitled, " Dissertation sur les Bulles contre Baius, ou l'on montre qu'elles ne sont pas reçues par l'Eglise," and published in two volumes 8vo. at Utrecht, in the year 1737.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. FART I.

inflame the divisions and animosities which already subsisted. And, accordingly, in the year 1588, this contest was finished, and the storm allayed in such a manner, that the contending parties were left in the quiet possession of their respective opinions, and folemnly prohibited from disputing, either in public or in private, upon the intricate points that had Had the succeeding ponexcited their divisions. tiss, instead of assuming the character of judges in this ambiguous and difficult controversy, imitated the prudence of Sixtus, and imposed silence on the litigious doctors, who renewed afterwards the debates concerning divine grace, the tranquillity and unity of the church of Rome would not have been interrupted by fuch violent divisions as rage at present in its bosom  $\lceil h \rceil$ .

The controvertice with the Molinifts. XL. The Romish church had scarcely perceived the fruits of that calm, which the prudence of Sixtus had restored, by suppressing, instead of deciding the late controversies, when new commotions, of the same nature, but of a much more terrible aspect, arose to disturb its tranquility. These were occasioned by the Jesuit Molina [i], professor of divinity

[b] See Apologie Historique des deux Censures de Louvain et de Douay, par M. Gery, 1688, in 8vo. The famous Pasquier Quesuel was the author of this apology, if we may give credit to the writer of a book entitled, "Catechisme Historique et Dogmatique sur les Contestations de l'Eglise," tome i. p. 104. See an account of this controversy in the "Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire des Controverses dans l'Eglise Romaine sur la Predestination et sur la Grace." This curious piece is to be sound in the sourteenth tome of Le Clerc's Bibliotheque Universelle Historique.

[i] From the name of this Spanish doctor proceeded the well-known denomination of Molinists, by which those Roman catholics are distinguished, who seem to incline to the doctrines of grace and free-will, that are maintained in opposition to those of Augustine. Many, however, who differ widely from the sentiments of Molina, are unjustly ranked in the class of Molinists.

in the university of Ebora in Portugal, who, in the year 1588, published a book to shew that the operations of divine grace were entirely consistent with the freedom of buman will [k], and who introduced a new kind of hypothesis, to remove the difficulties attending the doctrines of predestination and liberty, and to reconcile the jarring opinions of Augustinians, Thomists, Semi-Pelagians, and other contentious divines [1]. This attempt of the subtile Spanish doctor was so offensive to the Dominicans, who followed St. Thomas as their theological guide, that they founded throughout Spain and Portugal the alarm of herefy, and accused the Jesuits of endeavouring to renew the errors of Pelagius. alarm was followed by great commotions, and all things seemed to prognosticate a general slame, when Clement VIII. in the year 1594, imposed filence on the contending parties, promising that

CENT. XVI. SECT. III.

Arbitrii Concordia cum Gratiz donis, divina przscientia, providentia, przdestinatione, et reprobatione, auctore Lud. Molina." This book was sirst published at Liston, in solio, in the year 1588; afterwards, with additions, and in 4to, at Antwerp, Lyons, Venice, and other places, in 1595. A third edition, still farther augmented, was published at Antwerp in 1609.

[1] Molina affirmed, that the decree of predestination to eternal glory was founded upon a previous knowlege and confideration of the merits of the elect; that the grace, from whose operation these merits are derived, is not efficacious by its own intrinsic power only, but also by the consent of our own will, and because it is administered in those circumstances in which the Deity, by that branch of his knowledge which is called Scientia Media, foresees that it will be efficacious. The kind of prescience denominated in the schools Scientia Media, is that fore-knowledge of future contingencies, that arises from an acquaintance with the nature and faculties of rational beings, the circumstances in which they shall be placed, the objects that shall be presented to them, and the influence that these circumstances and objects must have on their actions.

CENT, XVI. SECT. III. PART L he himself would examine with care and diligence every thing relating to this new debate, in order to decide it in such a manner as might tend to promote the cause of truth, and the peace of the church.

The congregation of Aids.

XLI. The pontiff was perfuaded that these gentle remedies would soon remove the disease, and that, through length of time, these heats and animosities would undoubtedly subside. But the event was far from being answerable to such pleasing hopes. The Dominicans, who had long fostered a deep-rooted and invincible hatred against the Jesuits, having now an opportunity of venting their indignation, exhausted their furious zeal against the doctrine of Molina, notwithstanding the pacific injunctions of the papal edict. They incessantly fatigued Philip II. of Spain, and pope Clement VIII., with their importunate clamours, until at length the latter found himself under a necessity of assembling at Rome a fort of council for the decision of this controversy. And thus commenced, about the beginning of the year 1598, those famous deliberations concerning the contests of the Jesuits and Dominicans, which took place in what was called the congregation de auxiliis, or of aids. This congregation was so denominated on account of the principal point in debate, which was the efficacy of the aids and succours of divine grace; and its consultations were directed by Louis Madrusi, bishop of Trent, and one of the college of cardinals, who fat as president in this assembly, which was composed besides of three bishops and seven divines chosen out of so many different orders. The remaining part of this century was wholly employed by these spiritual judges in hearing and weighing the arguments alleged in favour of their respective opinions opinions by the contending parties [m]. The Do- CENT. minicans maintained, with the greatest obstinacy, section. the doctrine of their patron St. Thomas, as alone conformable to truth. The Issuits, on the other hand, though they did not adopt the religious tenets of Molina, thought the honour of their order concerned in this controversy, on account of the opposition so publicly made to one of its. members, and consequently used their utmost endeavours to have the Spanish doctor acquitted of the charge of Pelagianism, and declared free from any errors of moment. In this they acted according to the true monastic spirit, which

[m] The history and transactions of this Congregation are related and illustrated by several writers of different complexions, by Jesuits, Dominicans, and Jansenists. Hyacinth Serri, a Dominican, published, under the feigned name of Augustin le Blanc, in the year 1700, at Louvain, a work entitled, " Historia Congregationum de auxilie Gratia divina;" which was answered by another history of these debates, compoled by Liv. de Meyer, a Jesuit, who assumed the name of Theod. Eleutherius, in order to lie concealed from public view, and whose book is entitled, "Historia Controversiarum de Gratice divince auxiliis." The Dominicans also published the Asa congregationum et disputationum, que coram Clemente VIII. et Paulo V. de auxiliis divina Gratia sunt celebrate, a work composed by Thomas de Lemos, a subtile monk of their order, who, in this very congregation, had defended with great applause the glory of St. Thomas against the Jefries. - A midst these jarring accounts, a man must be endowed with a supernatural sagacity to come at the truth. For acts are opposed to acts, testimony to testimony, and narration to named on. It is therefore a matter of doubt, which the court of Rome favoured most on this occasion, the Jesuits or the Dominicans, and which of these two parties defended their cause with the greatest dexterity and success. There is also a history of these debates written in French, which was pubtiched, in 8vo, at Louvain, in the year 1702, under the following title: "Histoire des Congregations de auxilie, par un Docteur de la Faculté de Theologie de Paris." This historian, though he be neither destitute of learning nor elegance, being nevertheless a slaming Jansenist, discovers throughout his comity against the Jesuita, and relates all things in a manner that favours the cause of the Dominicans.

CENT. leads each order to resent the affronts that are offered to any of its members, as if they had been cast upon the whole community, and to maintain, at all adventures, the cause of every individual monk, as if the interests of the whole society were involved in it.

Rites and cesemonies.

XLII. Notwithstanding the zealous attempts that were made, by several persons of eminent piety, to restore the institutions of public worship to their primitive simplicity, the multitude of vain and useless ceremonies still remained in the church; nor did the pontiffs judge it proper to diminish that pomp and show, that gave the ministers of religion a great, though ill-acquired, influence on the minds of the people. Besides these ceremonies, many popular customs and inventions, which were multiplied by the clergy, and were either entirely abfurd or grossly superstitious, called loudly for redress; and, indeed, the council of Trent seemed disposed to correct these abuses, and prevent their farther growth. this good design was never carried into execution; it was abandoned, either through the corrupt prudence of the pope and clergy, who looked upon every check given to superstition as an attempt to diminish their authority, or through their criminal negligence about every thing that tended to promote the true interests of religion. Hence it happens, that in those countries where there are few protestants, and consequently where the church of Rome is in no danger of losing its credit and influence from the proximity and attempts of these pretended heretics, superstition reigns with unlimited extravagance and abfurdity. Such is the case in Italy, Spain, and Portugal, where the feeble glimmerings of Christianity, that yet remain, are overwhelmed and obscured by an enormous multitude of ridiculous ceremonies, and absurd, fantastic, and unaccountable rites; so that a person who arrives in any of these countries, CENT. after having passed among other nations even of the Romish communion, is immediately struck with the change, and thinks himself transported into the thickest darkness, into the most gloomy retreats of superstition [n]. Nor, indeed, are even those nations whom the neighbourhood of the protestants, and a more free and liberal turn of mind, have rendered somewhat less absurd, entirely exempt from the dominion of fuperstition, and the solemn fooleries that always attend it; for the religion of Rome, in its best form, and in those places where its external worship is the least shocking, is certainly loaded with rites and obfervances that are highly offensive to found reason. If, from this general view of things, we descend to a more circumstantial consideration of the innumerable abuses that are established in the discipline of that church; if we attend to the pious, or rather impious, frauds which are imposed, with impunity, upon the deluded multitude, in many places; if we pass in review the corruption of the clergy, the ignorance of the people, the devout farces that are acted in the ceremonies of public worship, and the insipid jargon and trisling rhetoric that prevail in the discourses of the Romish preachers; if we weigh all these things maturely, we shall find, that they have little regard to impartiality and truth, who pretend that, fince the council of Trent, the religion and worship of the Roman church have been every where corrected and amended.

[a] It is well known that the French, who travel into Italy, employ the whole force of their wit and raillery in rendering ridiculous the monstrous superstition of the Italians. The Italians, in their turn, look upon the French that visit their country as totally destitute of all principles of religion. This is evideatly the case, as we learn from the testimony of many writers, and particularly from that of Father Labat, in his Voyages en Italie et en Espagne. This agreeable Dominican lets no opportraity escape of centuring and exposing the superstition of the Spaniards and Italians; nor does be pretend to deny that his countrymen, and even he himself, passed for impious libertines the opinion of these bigots.

CENT.

CHAP. II.

The History of the Greek and Eastern Churches.

church may be divided into three branches.

The eastern I. THE Christian society that goes under 1 the general denomination of the eastern church, is dispersed throughout Europe, Asia, and Africa, and may be divided into three distinct communities. The first is, that of the Greek - Christians, who agree, in all points of doctrine and worship, with the patriarch residing at Constantinople, and reject the pretended supremacy of the Roman pontiff. The second comprehends those Christians who differ equally from the Roman pontiff and the Grecian patriarch, in their religious opinions and institutions, and who live under the government of their own bishops and rulers. The third is composed of those who are subject to the see of Rome.

The Greek

II. That society which holds religious comperly speak munion with the patriarch of Constantinople, is, properly speaking, the Greek (though it assumes likewise the title of the eastern) church. This fociety is subdivided into two branches, of which the one acknowleges the supreme authority and jurisdiction of the bishop of Constantinople; while the other, though joined in communion of doctrine and worship with that prelate, yet obstinately refuses to receive his legates, or to obey his edicts, and is governed by its own laws and institutions, under the jurisdiction of spiritual rulers, who are not dependent on any foreign authority,

III. That

SECT. IIL

Is for the

subject to the patri-

flantinople,

III. That part of the Greek church which CENT acknowleges the jurisdiction of the bishop of Constantinople, is divided, as in the early ages of Christianity, into four large districts or provinces, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem; most part and over each of these a bishop presides with the title of Patriarch, whom the inferior bishops and arch of Conmonastic orders unanimously respect as their common Father. But the supreme chief of all these patriarchs, bishops, and abbots, and indeed of the whole church, is the patriarch of Conflantinople. This prelate has the privilege of nominating the other patriarchs, though that dignity still continues apparently elective, and of approving the election that is made; nor is there any thing of moment undertaken or transacted in the church without his express permission, or his especial order. It is true, that in the present decayed state of the Greek churches, whose revenues are so small, and whose former opulence is reduced almost to nothing, their spiritual rulers enjoy little more than the splendid title of Patriarchs, without being in a condition to extend their fame, or promote their cause, by any undertaking of signal importance.

of

IV. The spiritual jurisdiction and dominion of and begin the patriarch of Constantinople are very extensive, ded into four procomprehending a considerable part of Greece, the vinces or di-Grecian Isles, Wallachia, Moldavia, and several stricts here of the European and Asiatic provinces that are subject to the Turks. The patriarch of Alexandria refides generally at Cairo, and exercifes his spiritual authority in Egypt, Nubia, Libya, and part of Arabia [o]. Damascus is the principal residence

[e] For an account of the patriarchate of Alexandria, and the various prelates who have filled that see, it will be proper to consult Sollerii Commentar. de Patriarchis Alexandrinis, prefixed to the fifth volume of the Alla Sanllorum Menfis Q 3

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. of the patriarch of Antioch, whose jurisdiction extends to Mesopotamia, Syria, Cilicia, and other provinces [p], while the patriarch of Jerusalem comprehends, within the bounds of his pontificate, Palestine, Syria [q], Arabia, the country beyond Jordan, Cana in Galilee, and mount Sion [r], Mensis Junii; as also the Oriens Christianus of Mich. Le Quien, tom. ii. p. 329. The nature of their office, the extent of their authority, and the manner of their creation, are accurately described by Eus. Renaudot, in his Dissertatio de Patriarcha Alexandrino, published in the first volume of his Liturgia Orientales, p. 365. The Grecian patriarch has, at this day, no bishops under his jurisdiction; the charepiscopi or rural bishops alone are subject to his authority. All the bishops acknowledge as their chief the patriarch of the Monophysites, who is, in effect, the patriarch of Alexandria.

[p] The Jesuits have prefixed a particular and learned account of the patriarchs of Antioch to the fifth volume of the Alla SS. Mensis Julii, in which, however, there are some omissions and defects. Add to this the account that is given of the district or diocese of the patriarch of Antioch, by Le Quien, in his Oriens Christianus, tom. ii. p. 670, and by Blasius Tertius, in his "Siria Sacra, à Descrittione Historiço-Geographica delle due Chiese Patriarchali, Antiochia, e Gierusalemme," published in solio at Rome, in the year 1695. There are three bishops in Syria who claim the title and dignity of patriarch of Antioch. The first is the bishop of the Melchites, a name given to the Christians in Syria, who follow the doctrine, institutions, and worship of the Greek church; the second is the spiritual guide of the Syrian Monophysites; and the third is the chief of the Maronites, who hold communion with the church of Rome. This last bishop pretends to be the true and lawful patriarch of Antioch, and is acknowleged as such, or at least receives this denomination from the Roman pontiff. And yet it is certain, that the pope creates at Rome a patriarch of Antioch of his own choice. Thus the see of Antioch has, at this day, four patriarchs, one from the Greeks, two from the Syrians, and one created at Rome, who is patriarch in partibus, i. e. titular patriarch, according to the fignification of that usual phrase.

of [q] Syria is here erroneously placed in the patriarchate of Jerusalem: it evidently belongs to that of Antioch, in which also Dr. Mosheim places it in the preceding part of the sentence.

[r] Blas. Tertii Siria Sacra, lib. ii. p. 165. D. Papebrochii Comment. de Patriarch. Hierosolym. tom. iii. A8. Sand. Mens. Maii.—Le Quieu, Oriens Christ. tom. iii. p. 102.

The episcopal dominions of these three patriarchs tre indeed extremely poor and inconsiderable; for he Monophysites have long since assumed the patriarchal feats of Alexandria and Antioch, and have deprived the Greek churches of the greatest part of their members in all those places where they have gained an ascendency. And as Jerusalem is the resort of Christians of every sect, who have their respective bishops and rulers, the jurisdiction of the Grecian patriarch is consequently confined there within narrow limits.

CENT.

V. The right of electing the patriarch of Con- The patristantinople is, at this day, vested in the twelve such of Conbishops who reside nearest that famous capital; but the Turkish emperor alone enjoys the right of confirming this election, and of enabling the newchosen patriarch to exercise his spiritual functions. This institution, however, if it is not entirely overturned, is nevertheless, on many occasions, profituted in a shameful manner by the corruption and avarice of the reigning ministers. Thus it happens, that many bishops, inflamed with the ambitious lust of power and pre-eminence, purchase by money what they cannot obtain by merit; and seeing themselves excluded from the patriarchal dignity by the suffrages of their brethren, find an open and ready way to it by the mercenary services of men in power. What is yet more deplorable has frequently hap-pened: prelates, who have been chosen in the lawful way to this eminent office, have even been deposed, in order to make way for others, whose only pretensions were ambition and bribery. And indeed, generally speaking, he is looked upon by the Turkish vizirs as the most qualified for the office of patriarch, who surpasses his competitors in the number and value of the presents he employs on that occasion. It is true, some accounts worthy of credit represent the present state of the Greek Q 4

CENT. Greek church as advantageously changed in this respect; and it is reported, that, as the Turkish manners have gradually affumed a milder and more humane cast, the patriarchs live under their dominion with more security and repose than they did fome ages ago [s].

The power of the patriarch among a people dispirited by oppression, and sunk, through their extreme ignorance, into the greatest superstition, may be supposed to be very considerable and extensive; and such, indeed, it is. Its extent, however, is not entirely derived from the causes now mentioned, but from others that give no finall weight and lustre to the patriarchal dignity. For this prelate not only calls councils by his own authority, in order to decide, by their assistance, the controversies that arise, and to make use of their prudent advice and wife deliberations in directing the affairs of the church; his prerogatives go yet farther, and, by the especial permission of the sultan, he administers justice and takes cognizance of civil causes among the members of his communion. His influence is maintained, on the one hand, by the authority of the Turkish monarch, and, on the other, by his right of excommunicating the disobedient members of the Greek church. This right gives the patriarchs a singular degree of instruence and authority, as nothing has a more terrifying aspect to that people than a sentence of excommunication, which they reckon among the greatest and most tremendous evils. The revenue of this prelate is drawn particularly from the churches that are subject to his jurisdiction; and its produce varies according to the state and circumstances of the

Greek

[s] Le Quien, ibid. tom. i. p. 145.—Elsner, Beschreibung der Griechischen Christen in der Turckey, p. 54.

CENT:

Greek Christians, whose condition is exposed to pany viciflitudes [t].

BECT. ITT VI. The holy scriptures and the decrees of the isset seven general councils are acknowleded by The doche Greeks as the rule of their faith. It is received, trine of the however, as a maxim established by long custom, Greek church. that no private person has a right to explain, for himself or others, either the declarations of scripwere, or the decisions of these councils; and that the patriarch, and his brethren are alone authorifed to consult these oracles, and to declare their meaning. And, accordingly, the declarations of this prelate are looked upon as facred and infallible directions, whose authority is supreme, and which can neither be transgressed nor disregarded without the utmost impiety. The substance of the doctrine of the Greek church is contained in a treatife entitled, The orthodox confession of the setbolic and apostolic eastern church, which was drawn up by Peter Mogislaus, bishop of Kiow, in a provincial council assembled in that city. This confession was translated into Greek [u], and publicly approved and adopted, in the year 1643, by Parthenius of Constantinople, and all the other Grecian patriarchs. It was afterwards published in Greek and Latin, at the expence of Panagiota, the grand-fignor's interpreter, a man of great opulence and liberality, who ordered it to be distributed gratis among the Greek Christians;

Hodierne Statu, p. 48.—59.
[u] It was originally composed in the Russian language.

and

[#] Cuper, a Jesuit, has given a History of the Patriarchs of Conftantinople, in the Ada Sandorum Menfis Augusti, tom. i. p. 1-257. There is also a very ample account both of the see of Constantinople and its patriarchs, in the first volume of the Oriens Christianus of Mich. Le Quien, who treats moreover of the Latin patriarchs of that city, in the third volume of the same work, p. 786. See also a brief account of the power and revenues of the present patriarch, and of the names of the several sees under his spiritual jurisdiction, in Smith, De Eccles. Gracia

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. and it was also enriched with a recommendatory letter composed by Nectarius, patriarch of Jerusalem [w]. It appears evidently from this confession, that the Greeks differ widely from the votaries of the Roman pontiss, whose doctrines they reject and treat with indignation in several places; but it appears, at the same time, that their religious tenets are equally remote from those of other Christian societies; so that whoever peruses this treatise with attention, will be fully convinced, how much certain writers mistake the case, who imagine that the obstacles which prevent the union of the Greeks with this or the other Christian community, are small and inconsiderable [x].

[w] This Confession was published in 8vo, at Leipsic, with a Latin translation, by Laur. Normannus, in the year 1695. In the preface we are informed, that it had been composed by Nectarius: but this affertion is refuted by Nectarius himself, in a letter which immediately follows the preface. It is also affirmed, both in the preface and title-page, that this is the first public edition which has been given of the Greek confesfion. But this affertion is also falle; fince it is well known that it was published in Holland in the year 1662, at the expence of Panagiota. The German translation of this confelfion was published at Franckfort and Leipsic, in 4to, in 1727. The learned Jo. Christ. Kocher has given, with his usual accuracy and erudition, an ample account both of this and the other confessions received among the Greeks, in his Bibliotheca Theologia Symbol. p. 45. and 53; and the laborious Dr. Hoffman, principal professor of divinity at Wittenberg, published at Breslaw, in 1751, a new edition of the Orthodox Confession, with an historical account of it. Those who are defirous of a circumstantial account of the famous Panagiota, to whom this confession was indebted for a considerable part of its credit, and who rendered to the Greek church in general the most eminent services, will find it in Cantemir's Histoire de PEmpire Ottoman, tome iii. p. 149.

[x] The learned Fabricius has given, in the tenth volume of his Bibliotheca Greca, p. 441. an exact and ample lift of the writers, whom it is proper to consult, in order to form a just notion of the state, circumstances, and doctrines of the Greek shurch.

VII. The

VII. The votaries of Rome have found this to CENT. be true on many occasions. And the Lutherans made an experiment of the same kind, when they presented a fruitless invitation to the Greek The delign churches to embrace their doctrine and discipline, of uniting and live with them in religious communion. The the Greeks with the first steps in this laudable attempt were taken by Protestance Melancthon, who sent to the patriarch of Conmilcarrie s; fantinople a copy of the confession of Augsburg, translated into Greek by Paul Dolscius. present was accompanied with a letter, in which the learned and humane professor of Wittenberg represented the protestant doctrine with the utmost simplicity and faithfulness, hoping that the artless charms of truth might touch the heart of the Grecian prelate. But his hopes were disappointed; for the patriarch did not even deign to send him an answer [y]. After this, the divines of Tubingen renewed, with his fuccessor Jeremiah [z], the correspondence which had been begun by Melancthon. They wrote frequently, during the course of several years [a], to the new patriarch, and fent him another copy of the confession of Augsburg together with a Compend of Theology, composed by Heerbrand, and translated into Greek by Marin Crusius; nor did they leave unemployed any means, which a pious and well-conducted zeal could suggest as proper to gain over this prelate to their communion. The fruits, however, of this correspondence were very inconsiderable, and wholly confifted in a few letters from the Greek patriarch, written, indeed, with an amiable

[y] Leo Allatius, de perpetua Consensione Ecclesia Orient, et Occident. lib. iii. cap. viii. sect. ii. p. 1005.

[a] This correspondence commenced in the year 1576, and ended in 1581.

(pirit

The name of the former patriarch was Joseph. In the year 1559, he had fent his deacon Demetrius to Witten, berg, to inform himself upon the spot of the genius and doctrines of the protestant religion.

CENT., XVI. SECT. III. PART 1. spirit of benevolence and cordiality, but at the same time in terms which shewed the impossibility of the union so much desired by the protestants. The whole strain of these letters discovered in the Greeks an inviolable attachment to the opinions and institutions of their ancestors, and tended to demonstrate the vanity of attempting to dissolve it in the present situation and circumstances of that people [b].

The milerable state of the Greeks.

VIII. Nothing, indeed, more deplorable can be conceived than the state of the greatest part of the Greeks, since their subjection to the oppressive yoke of the Turkish emperors. Since that fatal period, almost all learning and science, human and divine, have been extinguished among them. They have neither schools, colleges, nor any of those literary establishments that ennoble human nature, by fowing in the mind the immortal feeds of knowlege and virtue. Those few who surpass the vulgar herd in intellectual acquirements have derived this advantage from the schools of learning in Sicily or kely, where the studious Greeks usually repair in quest of knowlege, or from a perusal of the writings of the ancient doctors, and more especially of the theology of St. Thomas Aquinas, which they have translated into their native language [c].

Such, at least, is the notion of the learning of the modern Greeks, that is entertained by all the

European

[b] All the acts and papers relating to this correspondence were published in one volume at Wittenberg, in the year 1584. See Christ. Matth. Pfassii Liber de Adis et Scriptis publicis Ecclesia Wirtembergica, p. 50.—See also Jo. Alb. Fabricii Biblioth. Graca, vol. x. p. 517,—Emman. a Schelstrate, Ada Ecclesia Orientalis contra Lutheri baresin, published at Rome in the year 1739.—Lami Delicia Eruditorum, tom. viii. p. 176.

[c] The translator has inserted the note [k] of the original into that paragraph of the English text, which begins thus: Such, at least, &c.

European Christians, as well Roman Catholics as CENT. protestants; and it is built upon the clearest evidence, and supported by testimonies of every kind. Many of the Greeks deny with obstinacy this inglorious charge, and not only defend their countrymen against the imputation of such gross ignorance, but even go so far as to maintain, that all the liberal arts and sciences are in as flourishing a state in modern Greece, as they were in any period of the history of that nation. Among the writers that exalt the learning of the modern Greeks in such an extraordinary manner, the first place is due to an eminent historian [d], who has taken much pains to demonstrate the error of those who are of a different opinion. For this purpose he has not only composed a list of the learned men that adorned that country in the last century, but also makes mention of an academy founded at Constantinople by a certain Greek, whose name was Manolax, in which all the branches of philosophy, all the liberal and useful arts and sciences, are taught with the utmost success and applause, after the manner of the ancient sages of Greece. But all this, though matter of fact, does not amount to a latisfactory proof of the point in question. It only proves, what was never doubted by any thinking person, that the populous Greek nation, in which many ancient, noble, and opulent families, is not entirely destitute of men of learning and genius. But it does not at all demonstrate, that this nation, considered in general, is at present enriched with science either sacred or profene, or makes any shining figure in the republic of letters. In a nation which, generally speaking, is sunk in the most barbarous ignorance, some men of genius and learning may arise, and shine like meteors in a gloomy firmament. With respect to the academy founded at Constantinople, it may be observed, that a literary establishment, so necessary and yet so recent, confirms the judgment that has been almost univerfally formed concerning the state of erudition among the Greeks.

[d] See Demetrius Cautemii's Histoire de l'Empire Ottoman, tom. ii. p., 38.

This ignorance, that reigns among the Greeks, has the most pernicious influence upon their morals. Licentiousness and impiety not only abound among the people, but also dishonour leaders; and the calamities that arise from this corruption of manners, are deplorably augmented by their endless contentions and divisions. religion is a motley collection of ceremonies, the greatest part of which are either ridiculously trifling, or shockingly absurd. Yet they are much more zealous in retaining and observing these fenseless rites, than in maintaining the doctrine, or obeying the precepts, of the religion they profess. Their misery would be extreme, were it not for the support they derive from those Greeks who perform the functions of physicians and interpreters at the emperor's court; and who, by their opulence and credit, frequently interpose to reconcile the differences, or to ward off the dangers, that so often menace their church with destruction.

The Greek church independent of foreign jurildiction.

IX. The Russians, Georgians, and Mingrelians, adopt the doctrines and ceremonies of the Greek church; though they are entirely free from the jurisdiction and authority of the patriarch of Constantinople. It is true, indeed, that this prelate had formerly enjoyed the privilege of a spiritual supremacy over the Russians, to whom he sent a bishop whenever a vacancy happened. But, towards the conclusion of this century, this privilege ceased by the following incident. Jeremiah II., patriarch patriarch of Constantinople, undertook a journey CENT.

into Moscovy, to levy pecuniary succours against his rival Metrophanes, and to drive him, by the force of money, from the patriarchal throne. On this occasion, the Moscovite monks, in compliance, no doubt, with the secret orders of the grand duke Theodore, the fon of John Basilides or Basilowitz, employed all the influence both of threatenings and supplications to engage Jeremiah to place at the head of the Moscovite nation an independent patriarch. The patriarch of Constantimple, unable to resist such powerful solicitations, was forced to yield; and accordingly, in a council affembled at Moscow in the year 1589, he nominated and proclaimed Job, archbishop of Rostow, the first patriarch of the Moscovites. This extraordinary step was, however, taken on condition that every new patriarch of the Russians should demand the consent and suffrage of the patriarch of Constantinople, and pay, at fixed periods, five hundred gold ducats. The transactions of this Moscovite council were afterwards ratified in one assembled by Jeremiah at Confantinople in the year 1593, to which ratification the Turkish emperor gave his solemn con-fent [e]. But the privileges and immunities of the patriarch of Moscow were extended about the middle of the sollowing century, when the sour eastern patriarchs, under the pontisicate of Dionysius II. patriarch of Constantinople, ex-empted him, at the renewed solicitation of the grand duke of Moscowy, from the double obligation of paying tribute, and of depending, for the

confirmation

[e] See Anton. Possevini Moscovia.—Mich. Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, tom. i. p. 1292.—The Catalogus Codic. MSS. Biblisth. Taurinens. (p. 433—469.) contains Jeremiah's account of this transaction.

CENT.

confirmation of his election and installation, on a foreign jurisdiction [f].

The Georgians and Mingrelians.

X. The Georgians and Mingrelians, or, as they were anciently called, the Iberians and Colchians, have declined so remarkably since the Mohammedan dominion has been established in these countries, that they can scarcely be ranked in the number of Christians. Such, in a more especial manner, is the depraved state of the latter, who wander about the woods and mountains, and lead a favage and undisciplined life; for, among the Georgians or Iberians, there are yet some remains of religion, morals, and humanity. These nations have a pontiff at their head, whom they call the Catholic; they have also their bishops and priests; but these spiritual rulers are a dishonour to Christianity, by their ignorance, avarice, and profligacy; they furpass almost the populace in the corruption of their manners, and, grossly ignorant themselves of the truths and principles of religion, they never entertain the least thought of instructing the people. If therefore it be affirmed, that the Georgians and Mingrelians, at this day, are neither attached to the opinions of the Monaphysites, nor those of the Nestorians, but embrace the doctrine of the Greek church, this must be affirmed rather in consequence of probable conjecture, than of certain knowlege; since it is impossible to know, with precision, what are the sentiments of a people who seem to lie in the thickest darkness. Any remains of religion that are observable among them, are entirely comprehended in certain facred festivals and external ceremonies, of which the former are celebrated, and the latter are performed, without [f] Le Quien, Oriens Christian. tom. i. p. 155.—Noc. Bergius, de Ecclesia Moscovitica, Par. I. Sect. I. c. xvii. p. 164.

e least appearance of decency; for the priests CENT. minister the sacraments of baptism and of 2 Lord's suppér with as little respect and detion, as if they were partaking of an ordinary raft [g].

XI. The eastern Christians, who renounce the Of the eastmmunion of the Greek church, and differ from es that sepaboth in doctrine and worship, may be compre- rate from nded under two distinct classes. To the former long the Monophysites, or Jacobites, so called Greeks and m Jacob Albardai [h], who declare it as ir opinion, that in the Saviour of the world re is only one nature; while the latter compreads the followers of Nestorius, frequently led Chaldaans, from the country where they ncipally reside, and who suppose that there are o distinct persons or natures in the Son of God. le Monophysites are subdivided into two sects or

nion of the

[3] Clementis Galani Conciliatio Ecclesia Armenica cum mana, tom. i. p. 156.—Chardin's Voyage en Perse, &c. 1. i. p. 67. where the reader will find Jos. Mar. Zampi's ation de la Colchide et Mingrelie.—Lamberti's Relation de Colchide ou Mingrelie, in the Recueil des Voyages au Nord, ve vii. p. 160. Le Quien's Oriens Christianus, tom. i. 1333. 1339.—See also Rich. Simon's Histoire Critique des mes et ceremonies des Chretiens Orientaux, ch. v. and vi. p. 71. which the learned author endeavours to remove, at least, a t of the reproach under which the Georgians and Mingres labour on account of their supposed ignorance and cortion. The catholics or pontiffs of Georgia and Mingrelia at this day, exempt from foreign jurisdiction; they are, rever, obliged to pay a certain tribute to the patriarch of uftantinople.

b] This Jacob Albardai, or Baradæus, as he is called by ers, restored, in the fixth century, the sect of the Monorsites, then almost expiring, to its former vigour, and moed it anew; hence they were called Jacobites. This denoation is commonly used in an extensive sense, as comprehendall the Monophysites, except those of Armenia; it, howr, more strictly and properly belongs only to those Asiatic nophyfites, of whom Jacob Albardai was the restorer and chief. See Simon's Histoire des Chretiens Orientaux, ch. ix. 118. a work, nevertheless, that often wants correction.

VOL. IV. parties, CENT, XVI. LECT. III. PART I.

parties, the one African, the other Asiatic. At the head of the Asiatics is the patriarch of Antioch, who resides, for the most part, in the monastery of St. Ananias, which is situated near the city of Merdin, and fometimes at Merdin, his episcopal feat; as also at Amida, Aleppo, and other Syrian cities [i]. The government of this prelate is too extensive, and the churches over which he presides are too numerous, to allow his performing, himself, all the duties of his high office; and therefore a part of the administration of the pontificate is given to a kind of colleague, who is called the maphrian, or primate of the East, and whose doctrine and discipline are said to be adopted by the eastern churches beyond the Tigris. This primate used formerly to reside at Tauris, a city on the frontiers of Armenia; but his present habitation is the monastery of St. Matthew, which is in the neighbourhood of Mosul, a city of Mesopotamia. It is farther observable, that all the patriarchs of the Jacobites assume the denomination of Ignatius  $\lceil k \rceil$ .

The Copts and Abyf-finians.

XII. The African Monophysites are under the jurisdiction of the patriarch of Alexandria, who generally resides at Grand Cairo; and they are subdivided into Copts and Abyssinians. The former denomination comprehends all those Christians who dwell in Egypt, Nubia, and the countries adjacent, and whose condition is truly deplorable. Oppressed by the insatiable avarice and tyranny of the Turks, they draw out their wretched days in misery and want, and are unable to support either their patriarch or their bishops. These are not, however, left entirely destitute; since they are, in a manner, maintained by the liberality of those Copts, who, on account of their capacity in domestic affairs, and their dexterity in the exercise PART I. of feveral manual arts, highly useful, though entirely unknown to the Turks, have gained admittance into the principal Moslem families [1]. As to the Abyssinians, they surpass considerably the Copts, in number, power, and opulence; nor will this appear furprising, when it is confidered, that they live under the dominion of a Christian emperor; they, nevertheless, confider the Alexandrian pontiff as their spiritual parent and chief; and, consequently, instead of chusing their own bishop, receive from that prelate a primate, whom they call abuna, and whom they acknowlege as their ruler [ni].

[k] Assemani Dissertat. de Monophysitis, sech. wii.

[i] Assemani Dissert. de Monophysitis, tom. ii.—Biblioth. Orient. Clem. Vatican. sect. viii. Faust. Nairon's Enoplia sidei Catholica ex Syrorum Monument. p. I. p. 40.—Le Quien's Oriens Christ. tom. ii. p. 1343.

CENT.

XIII. These Monophysites differ from other The religi-Christian societies, whether of the Greek or Latin tripes and communion, in many points, both of doctrine rice of the and worship, though the principal reason of their Monophyseparation lies in the opinion they entertain concerning the nature and person of Jesus Christ.

[1] Renaudot published at Paris, in 4to, in the year 1713, a very learned work, relative to the history of the Eastern patriarchs, under the title of "Historia Alexandrinorum Patriarcharum Jacobitarum," &c. He also published the office used in the ordination of the Jacobite patriarch, with remarks, in the first volume of his Liturg. Orient. p. 467.—The internal state of the Alexandrian or Coptic church, both with respect to doctrine and worship, is described by Wansleb, in his "Histoire de l'Eglise d'Alexandrie, que nous appellons celle des Jacobites Coptes," published at Paris in 1667. Add to this another work of the same author, entitled, "Relation d'un Voyage en Egypte," p. 293. in which there is a particular ac count of the Coptic monasteries and religious orders. See also "Nouveaux Memoires des Missions de la Compagnie de Jesus dans le Levant," tome ii. p. 9. - Maillet's Description del' Egypte, tome ii. p. 64.

[m] Job Ludolf, Comment. in Histor. Æthiop. p. 451. 461. -Lobo, Voyage d'Abissinic, tome ii. p. 36.-Nouveaux Memoires des Missions dans le Levant, tome iv. p. 277.-Mich.

Le Quien, Oriens Christian. tom. ii. p. 641.

Following

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

Following the doctrine of Dioscorus, Barsuma, Xenaias, Fullo, and others, whom they confider as the heads or chief ornaments of their fect, they maintain that in Christ the divine and buman nature were reduced into one, and confequently reject both the decrees of the council of Chalcedon, and the famous letter of Leo the Great. however, they may not feem to have the least inclination towards the doctrine of Eutyches, which they profess to reject with the most ardent zeal, they propose their own system with the utmost caution and circumspection, and hold the following obscure principles: That the two natures are united in Christ without either confusion or mixture; so that though the nature of our Saviour be really one, yet it is at the same time twofold and compound  $\lceil n \rceil$ . By this declaration it appears, that those learned men, who look upon the difference between the Monophysites, and the Greek and Latin churches, rather as a dispute about words than things, are not fo far in an error as some have imagined [0]. Be that as it may, both the Asiatic [n] Assemani Biblioth. Orien. Clement. Vatican. tom. ii. p. 25. 34. 117. 133. 277. 297, &c.—See, in the same work, Abulpharajius' subtile vindication of the doctrine of his sect, vol. ii. p. 288. There is a complete and circumstantial account of the religion of the Abyssinians, in the Theologia Ethiopica of Gregory the Abyssinian, published by Fabricius, in his Lux Evangelii toti orbi exoriens, p. 716. where may also be found a list of all the writers who have given accounts of the Abyssinians.

[o] See La Croze, Hift. du Christianisme des Indes, p. 23. Assemani loc. citat. tom. ii. p. 291. 297.—Rich. Simon, Histoire des Chretiens Orientaux, p. 119.—Jo. Joach. Schroderi Thesaurus Lingue Armenice, p. 276. The truth of the matter is, that the terms used by the Monophysites are something more than equivocal; they are contradictory. It may also be farther observed, that those who pretend to hold a middle path between the doctrines of Nestorius and Eutyches, were greatly embarassed, as it was almost impossible to oppose the one, without adopting, or at least appearing to adopt the other.

and

and African Monophysites of the present times CENT. are, generally speaking, so deeply sunk in ignorance, that their attachment to the doctrine PART L by which they are distinguished from other Christian focieties, is rather founded on their own obstinacy, and on the authority of their ancestors, than on any other circumstance; nor do they even pretend to appeal, in its behalf, to reason and argument [p].

XIV. The Armenians [q], though they agree The Armer with the other Monophysites in the main doctrine of nians. that fect relating to the unity of the divine and human nature in Christ, differ from them, nevertheless, in many points of faith, discipline, and worship; and hence it comes to pass, that they hold no communion with that branch of the Monophysites who are Jacobites in the more limited sense of that term. The Armenian church is governed by three patriarchs [r]. The chief,

[p] The liturgies of the Copts, the Syrian Jacobites, and the Abyssinians, have been published, with learned observations, by Renaudot, in the first and second volumes of his Liturgie Orientales.

[q] The first writer, who gave a circumstantial account of the religion and history of the Armenians, was Clement Galani, an Italian of the order of the Theatins, whole Conciliatio Ecclesia Armenica cum Romana, was published at Rome, in three volumes, in folio, in the year 1659. The other authors, who have treated of this branch of ecclesiastical history, are enumerated by Fabricius, in his Lux Evangelii toti orbi exorien:, ch. xxxviii. p. 640; to which must be added, Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, tom. i. p. 1362.—The History of Christianity in Armenia, which the learned La Croze has subjoined to his account of the progress of the Christian religion in Abyssinia, and which was published at the Hague in 1739, is by no means answerable to the importance and copiousness of the subject; which must be attributed to the age and infirmities of that author. For an account of the particular institutions and rites of the Armenians, see Gemelli Carreri, Voyage autour du Monde, tome ii. p. 146.

[r] Sir Paul Ricaut mentions four; but his authority, were it more respectable than it really is, cannot be compared with that of the excellent fources from which Dr. Mosheim draws his materials.

TENT. whose diocese comprehends the Greater Arme
No. 1207. mia, beholds forty-two archbishops subjected to PART L his jurisdiction, and resides in a monastery at a place called Echmiazin. The revenues of this spiritual ruler are such as would enable him to live in the most splendid and magnificent manner [1]; but there are no marks of pomp or opulence in his external appearance, or in his domestic occonomy. His table is frugal, his habit plain; nor is he distinguished from the monks, with whom he lives, by any other circumstance than his superior power and authority. He is, for the most part, elected to his patriarchal dignity by the suirrages of the bishops assembled at Echmiazin, and his election is confirmed by the sclemn approbation of the Persian monarch. The second patriarch of the Armenians, who is called the Catholic, refides at Cis, a city of Cilicia, rules over the churches established in Cappadocia, Cilicia, Cyprus, and Syria, and hath twelve archbishops under his jurisdiction. He at present acknowleges his subordination to the patriarch of Echmiczin. The third patriarch, who has no more than eight or nine bishops under his dominion, resides in the island of Aghtamar (which is in the midst of the great lake of Varaspuracan), and is looked upon by the other Armenians as the enemy of their church.

> Besides these prelates, who are patriarchs in the true sense of that term, the Armenians have other spiritual leaders, who are honoured with the same appellation; but this, indeed, is no more than an empty title, unattended with the state una authority and prerogatives of the patriarchal dignity. Thus the archbishop of the Armenians, who lives at Constantinople, and whose authority is respected by the churches established in those provinces that form the connexion between Europe and Asia, enjoys the title of Patriarch. The same denomination is given to the Armenian bishop who resides at Jerusalem; and to the prelate of the same nation, who has his episcopal seat at Caminiec in Poland, and governs the Armenian churches that are established in Russia, Poland, and the adjacent countries. These bishops assume the title of Patriarchs, on account of some peculiar privileges conferred on them by the great patriarch of Echmiazin. For, by an authority derived from this supreme head of the Armenian church, they are allowed to consecrate bishops, and to make, every third year, and distribute among their congregations, the holy chrism, or ointment; which, according to a constant custom among the eastern Christians, is the privilege of the patriarchs. alone [t].

[s] R. Simon has subjoined to his Hift: ire des Chretiens Orient. p. 217. an account of all the Armenian churches that are subjed to the jurisdiction of this grand patriarch. But this account, though taken from Uscanus, an Armenian bishop, is neverthelels defective in many respects. For an account of the residence and manner of life of the patriarch of Echmiazin, see Paul Lucas, Voyage as Levant, tome ii. p. 247, and Gemelli rreri, Voyage autour du Monde, tome ii. p. 4-10.

CENT

XV. The Nestorians, who are also known by the the Nestodenomination of Chaldeans, have fixed their habitation chiefly in Mesopotamia and the neighbouring countries. They have several doctrines, as well as some religious ceremonies and institutions, that are peculiar to themselves. But the main points that distinguish them from all other Christian societies, are, their persuasion that Nestorius was [t] See the Nouveaux Memoires des Missions de la Compaguie de Jesus, tome iii. p. 1-218. where there is an ample and circumstantial account, both of the civil and religious state of the Armenians. This account has been highly applauded by M. de la Croze, for the fidelity, accuracy, and industry with which it is drawn up; and no man was more conversant in subjects of this nature than that learned author. - See his Histoire du Christianisme d'Ethiopie, p. 345.

unjustly

CENT. unjustly condemned by the council of Epbefus, and their firm attachment to the doctrine of that prelate, who maintained that there were not only two natures, but also two distinct persons in the Son of God. In the earlier ages of the church, this error was looked upon as of the most momentous and pernicious kind; but in our times it is esteemed of less consequence, by persons of the greatest weight and authority in theological matters, even among the Roman Catholic doctors. They consider this whole controversy as a dispute about words, and the opinion of Nestorius as a nominal, rather than a real herefy; that is, as an error arising rather from the words he employed, than from his intention in the use of them. It is true indeed, that the Chaldeans attribute to Christ two natures, and even two persons; but they correct what may seem rash in this expression, by adding, that these natures and persons are so closely and intimately united, that they have only one aspect. Now the word barsopa, by which they express this aspect, is precisely of the same signification with the Greek word Trosumo, which fignifies a person [u]; and hence it is evident, that they attached to the word. aspect the same idea that we attach to the word person, and that they understood by the word person, precisely what we understand by the term nature. However that may be, we must observe here, to the lasting honour of the Nestorians, that, of all the Christian societies established in the East, they have been the most careful and successful in avoiding a multitude of superstitious CENT. opinions and practices that have infected the Greek sect. III. and Latin churches  $\lceil x \rceil$ .

fuccels,

[u] It is in this manner that the sentiments of the Nestoria are explained in the inscriptions which adorn the tombs of their patriarchs in the city of Mosul.—See Assemani Biblioth. Oriental. Vatican. tom. iii. par. II. p. 210.—R. Simon, Histoire de la Creance des Chretiens Orientaux, ch. vii. p. 95. - Petrus. Strozzi, de dogmatibus Chuldeorum, published in 8vo, at Rome, in the year 1617.

XVI. In the earlier ages of Nestorianism, the Their various branches of that numerous and powerful patriarches sect were under the spiritual jurisdiction of the same pontiff, or catholic, who resided first at Bagdad, and afterwards at Mosul. But in this century the Nestorians were divided into two sects. They had chosen, in the year 1552, as has been already obferved, two bishops at the same time, Simeon. Barmama, and John Sulaka, otherwise named Siud. The latter, to strengthen his interest, and to triumph over his competitor, hastened to Rome, and acknowleged the jurisdiction, that he might be supported by the credit of the Roman pontiff. In the year 1555, Simeon Denha, archbishop of Gelu, adopted the party of the fugitive patriarch, who had embraced the communion of the Latin church; and, being afterwards chosen patriarch himself, fixed his residence in the city of Ormia, in the mountainous parts of Persia, where his successors still continue, and are all distinguished by the name of Simeon. So far down as the last century, these patriarchs persevered in their communion with the church of Rome; but they seem at present to have withdrawn themselves from it [y]. The great Nestorian pontiffs, who form the opposite party, and look with an hostile eye on this little patriarch, have, fince the year 1559, been distinguished by the general denomination of Elias, and reside con-

[x] See the learned differtation of Assemanus de Syris Neftorianis, which occupies entirely the fourth volume of his Biblioth. Oriental. Vatican, and which seems to have been much consulted and partly copied by Mich. Le Quien, in the eleventh volume of his Oriens Christianus, p. 1078.

[y] See Jos. Sim. Assemani Biblioth. Orient. Vatican. tom. i. p. 538. and tom. ii. p. 456.

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART I. stantly in the city of Moful [z]. Their spiritual dominion is very extensive, takes in a great part of Asia, and comprehends also within its circuit the Arabian Nestorians; as also the Christians of St. Thomas, who dwell along the coast of Malabar [a].

The remains of ancient fects.

XVII. Beside the Christian societies now mentioned, who still retain some faint shadow at least of the system of religion delivered by Christ and his apostles, there are other sects dispersed through a great part of Asia, whose principles and doctrines are highly pernicious. These sects derive their origin from the Ebionites, Valentinians, Manicheans, Basilidians, and other separatists, who, in the early ages of Christianity, excited schisms and factions in the church. Equally abhorred by Turks and Christians, and thus suffering oppression from all quarters, they gradually declined in successive centuries, and fell at length into fuch barbarous superstition and ignorance, as extinguished among them every spark of true religion. Thus were they reduced to the wretched and ignominious figure they at present make, having fallen from the privileges, and almost forfeited the very name of The sectaries, who pass in the East under the denomination of Sabians, who call themselves Mendai Ijabi, or the disciples of John, and whom the Europeans style the Christians of St. John, because they yet retain some knowlege of the gospel, are probably of Jewish origin, and the remains of the ancient Hemerobaptists, of whom the [2] A list of the Nestorian pontists is given by Assemanus, in his Biblioth. Orient. Vatican. tom. iii. par. I. p. 711. which is corrected, however, in the same volume, par. II. p. cml.—See also Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, tom. iii. p. 1078.

[a] The reader will find an ample account of the Christians of St. Thomas in La Croze, Histoire du Christianisme des Indes. See also Assemani Biblioth. tom. iii. par. II. cap. ix. p. cccexiii.

writers

writers of ecclesiastical history make frequent men- CENT. tion [a]. This, at least, is certain, that John, XVI. whom they consider as the founder of their sect, PART I. bears no fort of similitude to John the Baptist, but rather resembles the person of that name whom the ancient writers represent as the chief of the Jewish Hemerobaptists [b]. These ambiguous Christians, whatever their origin may be, dwell in Persia, and Arabia, and principally at Bafra, and their religion consists in bodily washings, performed frequently, and with great folemnity [c], and attended with certain ceremonies which the priests mingle with this superstitious service [d].

XVIII. The

[a] The fect of Hemerobaptists among the Jews were so called from their washing themselves every day, and their performing this custom with the greatest solemnity, as a religious rite, necessary to salvation. The account of this sect given by Epiphanius, in the introduction to his book of herefies, has been treated as a fiction, in consequence of the suspicions of inaccuracy and want of veracity, under which that author too justly labours. Even the existence of the Hemerobaptists has been denied, but without reason, since they are mentioned by Justin Martyr, Eusebius, and many other ancient writers, every way worthy of credit. That the Christians of St. John were descended from this sect, is rendered probable by many reasons, of which the principal and the most satisfactory may be seen in a very learned and ingenious work of Dr. Mosheim, entitled, Mosbemii de Rebus Christianorum ante Constantinum Magnum Commentarii, p. 44.

[b] See the preceding note.

[c] The Mendæans at present perform these ablutions only once in a year. See Mosheim, de Rebus Christian. ante Conft. Mag. Comment. p. 45.

[d] See the work of a learned Carmelite, named Ignatius a Jesu, published at Rome in 8vo., in the year 1652, under the following title: "Narratio originis rituum et errorum Christianorum S. Johannis: cui adjungitur discursus, per modum Dialogi, in quo confutantur xxxiv. errores ejusdem nationis." Engelb. Kzempferi Amanitates Exotica, Fascic. II. Relat. XI. p. 35.—Sale's Preface to his English Translation of the Koran, p. 15.—Assemani Biblioth. Oriental. tom. iii. par. II. p. 609.— Thevenot, Voyages, tome iv. p. 584.—Herbelot, Biblioth, Orient.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III PART I. The Jafidians, or Jazdicans. XVIII. The Jasidians, or Jezdaans, of whose religion and manners many reports of a very doubtful nature are given by voyage-writers, are an unsettled wandering tribe, who frequent the Gordian mountains, and the deserts of Curdistan, a province of Persia; the character of whose inhabitants has something in it peculiarly sierce and intractable. The Jezdaens are divided into black and white members. The former are the priests and rulers of the sect, who go arrayed in sable garments; while the latter, who compose the multitude, are clothed in white. Their system of religion is certainly very singular, and is not hitherto sufficiently Orient. p. 725.—The very learned Bayer had composed an historical account of these Mendæans, which contained a variety of curious and interesting facts, and of which he intended that I should be the editor; but a sudden death prevented his executing his intention. He was of opinion (as appears from the Thefaurus Epistolicus Crozianus, tom. i. p. 21.) that thefe Mendæans, or disciples of St. John, were a branch of the ancient Manicheans; which opinion La Croze himself seems to have adopted, as may be feen in the work now cited, tom. iii. p. 31. 52. But there is really nothing, either in the doctrines or manners of this sect, that resembles the opinions and practice of the Manicheans. Hence several learned men conjecture, that they derive their origin from the ancient idolators who worshiped a plurality of gods, and more especially from those who payed religious adoration to the stars of heaven, and who were called, by the Arabians, Sabians or Sabeans (Sabini). This opinion has been maintained with much erudition by the famous Fourmont, in a differtation inferted in the eighteenth volume of the "Memoires de l'Academie des Infcriptions et des Belles Lettres," p. 23. But it is absolutely groundless, and has not even a shadow of probability, if we except the name which the Mohammedans usually give to this sect. The Mendwans, themselves, acknowlege that they are of Jewish origin. and that they were transferred from Palestine into the country which they at present inhabit. They have sacred books of a very remote antiquity; among others, one which they attribute to Adam, and another composed by John, whom they revere as the founder of their sect. As these books were some years ago added to the library of the king of France, it is to be hoped that they may contribute to give us a more authentic account of this people than we have hitherto received.

known

CENT.

XVI. 9 E C T. 111.

known; though it be evidently composed of some Christian doctrines, and a motley mixture of sictions lrawn from a different fource. They are distinguished from the other corrupt sects, that have disnonoured Christianity, by the peculiar impiety of heir opinion concerning the evil genius. malignant principle they call Karubin, or Cherub, i. e. one of the great ministers of the Supreme Being. And if they do not directly address religious worship to this evil minister, they treat him at least with the utmost respect, and not only abstain, themselves, from offering him any marks of hatred or contempt, but moreover will not fuffer any contumelious treatment to be given him by others. They are faid to carry this reverence and circumspection to such an excessive height, that no efforts of perfecution, no torments, not even death itself, can engage them to conceive or express an abhorrence of this evil genius; and that they will make no scruple to put to death such persons as express, in their presence, an aversion to him [e].

XIX. The

[e] See Hyde, Historia Relig. Veter. Persarum in Append, p. 549.—Otter, Voyage en Turquie et en Perse, tome i. p. 121. tome ii. p. 249. In the freiteenth century, Michael Nau, a learned Jesuit, undertook to instruct this profane sect, and to give them juster notions of religion (see D'Arvieux, Memoires ou Vojages, tome vi. p. 362. 377), and after him another Jesuit, whose name was Monier, embarked in the same dangerous enterprize, (see Memoires des Missions des Jesuites, tome iii. p. 291); but how they were received, and what success attended their ministry, is hitherto unknown. Rhenferdius (as appears from the letters of the learned Gisbert Cuper, published by Bayer) considers the Jezdæans as the descendants of the ancient Sethians. But this opinion is no less improbable than that which makes them a branch of the Manicheans; which is sufficiently refuted by their sentiments concerning the Evil Beausobre, in his Hissoire du Manicheisme, tom. ii. Genius. p. 613. conjectures that the denomination of this sect is derived from the name of Jesus; but it seems rather to be borCENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. Duruzians, or Durlians.

XIX. The Duruzians, or Dursians, a fierce and warlike people that inhabit the craggy rocks and inhospitable wilds of mount Libanus, give themselves out for descendants of the Franks, who, from the eleventh century, carried on the holy war with the Mohammedans in Palestine; though this pretended origin is a matter of the greatest uncertainty. What the doctrine and discipline of this nation are at present, it is extremely difficult to know, as they are at the greatest pains imaginable to conceal their religious sentiments and princi-We find, however, both in their opinions and practice, the plainest proofs of their acquaintance with Christianity. Several learned men have imagined, that both they and the Curdi of Persia had formerly embraced the sentiments of the Manicheans, and perhaps still persist in their pernicious errors [f].

The Chamsi, or Solares, who reside in a certain district of Mesopotamia, are supposed, by curious inquirers into these matters, to be a branch of the Samfæans, mentioned by Epiphanius [g].

There are many other Semi-Christian sects of these kinds in the east [h], whose principles, tenets, and rowed from the word Jazid, or Jezdan, which, in the Persian language, signifies the good God, and is opposed to Abrimen, or Arimanius, the Evil Principle, (see Herbelot, Biblioth. Orient. p. 484.—Chereseddin Ali, Hist. de Timur-bec, tome iii. p. 81.) so that the appellative term derived from the former points out that sect as the worshipers of the good, or true God. Notwithstanding the plausibility of this account of the matter, it is not impossible that the city Jezd, of which Otter speaks in his Voyage en Turquie et en Perse, tome i. p. 283, may have given rise to the title of Jusidians, or Jezdans.

[f] See Lucas' Voyage en Grece et Asie Mineure, tome ii. p. 36.—Hyde's Hist. Relig. Veter. Persar. p. 491. 554.—Sir Paul Ricaut's History of the Ottoman Empire, vol. i. p. 313.

[g] Hyde, Histor. Relig. Veter. Persar. p. 555.

[h] The Jesuit Diusse (in the Lettres Edistantes et Curieuses des Missions Etrangeres, tome i. p. 63.)] informs us of the existence and institutions, are far from being unworthy of CENT. the curiofity of the learned. And those who would sect. III. be at the pains to turn their researches this way, and more especially to have the religious books of these sects conveyed into Europe, would undoubtedly render eminent service to the cause of sacred literature, and obtain applause from all who have a taste for the study of Christian antiquities; for the accounts which have hitherto been given of these nations and sects are full of uncertainty and contradiction.

XX. The missionaries of Rome have never ceased Of the to display, in these parts of the world, their dex- Greeks who embraced terity in making profelytes, and accordingly have the Roman founded, though with great difficulty and expence, communion. among the greatest part of the sects now mentioned, congregations that adopt the doctrine, and acknowlege the jurisdiction, of the Roman pontiff. It is abundantly known, that among the Greeks, who live under the empire of the Turks, and also among those who are subject to the dominion of the Venetians, the emperor of Germany, and other Christian princes, there are many who have adopted the faith and discipline of the Latin church, and are governed by their own clergy and bishops, who receive their confirmation and authority from Rome. In the latter city is a college, expressly founded with a view to multiply these apostatizing societies, and to encrease and strengthen the credit and authority of the Roman pontiss among the Greeks. In these colleges a certain number of Grecian students, who have given early marks of genius and capacity, are instructed in the arts and sciences, and are more especially prepossessed with the deepest sentiments of veneration and zeal for istence of a sect of Christians, in the mountains which separate Persia from India, who imprint the sign of the cross on their bodies with a red-hot iron.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

the authority of the pope. Such an institution, accompanied with the efforts and labours of the missionaries, could not fail, one would think, to gain an immense number of proselytes to Rome, considering the unhappy state of the Grecian churches. But the case is quite otherwise; for the most respectable writers, even of the Roman Catholic persuasion, acknowlege fairly, that the proselytes they have drawn from the Greek churches make a wretched and despicable figure, in point of number, opulence, and dignity, when compared with those, to whom the religion, government, and the very name of Rome, are disgusting and odious. They observe farther, that the sincerity of a great part of these proselytes is of the Grecian stamp; fo that, when a favourable occasion is offered them of renouncing, with advantage, their pretended conversion, they seldom fail, not only to return to the bosom of their own church, but even to recompense the good offices they received from the Romans with the most injurious treatment. The same writers mention another circumstance, much less surprising, indeed, than those now mentioned, but much more dishonourable to the church of Rome; and that circumstance is, that even those of the Greek students who are educated at Rome with fuch care, as might naturally attack them to its religion and government, are, nevertheless, so disgusted and shocked at the corruptions of its church, clergy, and people, that they forget, more notoriously than others, the obligations with which they have been loaded, and exert themselves with peculiar obstinacy and bitterness in opposing the credit and authority of the Latin church [i].

XXI. In

[i] See, among other authors who have treated this point of history, Urb. Cerri, Etat present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 82,

XXI. In their efforts to extend the papal empire over the Greek churches, the designing pontiss did not forget the church of Russia, the chief bulwark and ornament of the Grecian faith. On the contrary, frequent deliberations were holden at Rome, about the proper methods of uniting, or rather subjecting this church to the papal hierarchy. In churches atthis century John Basilides or Basilowitz, grand duke tempted in vain. of the Russians, seemed to discover a propensity towards this union, by fending, in the year 1580, a folemn embassy to Gregory XIII. to exhort that pontiff to resume the negotiations relative to this important matter, that they might be brought to a happy and speedy conclusion. Accordingly, in the year following, Antony Possevin, a learned and artful Jesuit, was charged by the pope with this commission, and sent into Moscovy, to carry it into execution. But this dexterous misfionary, though he spared no pains to obtain the purposes of his ambitious court, found by experience that all his efforts were unequal to the talk he had undertaken; nor did the Russian ambaffadors, who arrived at Rome soon after, bring any thing to the ardent wishes of the pontiff, but empty promises, conceived in dubious and general terms, on which little dependence could be placed  $\lceil k \rceil$ . And, indeed, the event abundantly shewed.

A junction between the Ruffian and in which, speaking of the Greeks, he expresses himself in the following manner: " Ils deviennent les plus violens ennemis des catholiques lorsqu'ils ont appris nos sciences, et qu'ils ont connoissance de nos impersections:" i. e. in plain English, they (the Greeks) become the bitterest enemies of us Roman catholics, when they have been instructed in our sciences, and have acquired the knowlege of our imperfections. Other testimonies of a like nature shall be given hereafter. Mich. Le Quien has given us an enumeration, although a defective one, of the Greek bishops that follow the rites of the Roman church, in his Oriens Christ. tom. iii. p. 360.

CENT.

[4] See the conferences between Possevin and the duke of Moscovy, together with the other writings of this Jesuit, rela-TOE. IY.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I. shewed, that Basilowitz had no other view, in all these negotiations, than to flatter the pope, and obtain his assistance, in order to bring to an advantageous conclusion the unsuccessful war which he had carried on against Poland.

The advice and exhortations of Possevin and his associates were attended with more fruit among that part of the Russians who reside in the Polish dominions, many of whom embraced the doctrine and rites of the Roman church, in consequence of an association agreed on in the year 1596, in a meeting at Bresty, the capital of the Palatinate of Cujavia. Those who thus submitted to the communion of Rome were called the United, while the adverse party, who adhered to the doctrine and jurisdiction of the patriarch of Constantinople, were distinguished by the title of the Non-United [1]. It is likewise worthy of observation here, that there has been established at Kiow, since the fourteenth century, a Russian congregation subject to the jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff, and ruled by its own metropolitans, who are entirely distinct from the Russian bishops that reside in that city [m].

The votaries of Rome still less mone-tous among the Mone-physites, Nestorians, and Armenians.

XII. The Roman missionaries made scarcely any spiritual conquests worthy of mention among either the Asiatic or African Monophysites. About the middle of the preceding century, a little insignificant church, that acknowledged the jurisdiction of the pope, was erected among the Nestorians, whose patriarchs, successively named Live to the negotiation in question, that are subjoined to his work, called Moscovia.—See also La Vie du Pere Possevia, par Jean Dorigny, liv. v. p. 351.

[1] Adr. Regenvolscii Histor. Ecclesiar. Slavonicar. lib. iv.

enp. ii. p. 465.

[m] See Mich. Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, tom. i. p. 1274. and tom. iii. p. 1126.—Ala Sandorum, tom. ii. Februar. p. 693.

Joseph,

Ioseph [n], reside in the city of Diarbek. Some CENT. of the Armenian provinces embraced the doctrines and discipline of Rome so early as the PART sourteenth century, under the pontificate of John XXIII. who, in the year 1318, fent them a Dominican monk to govern their church, with the title and authority of an archbishop. The episcopal seat of this spiritual ruler was first fixed at Soldania, a city in the province of Aderbijan [o]: but was afterwards transferred to Naxivan, where it still remains in the hands of the Dominicans, who alone are admitted to that spiritual dignity [2]. The Armenian churches in Poland, who have embraced the faith of Rome, have also their bishop, who resides at Lemberg [q]. The Georgians and Mingrelians, who were visited by some monks of the Theatin and Capuchin orders, disgusted these missionaries by their ferocity and ignorance, remained inattentive to their counsels, and unmoved by their admonitions; so that their ministry and labours were scarcely attended with any visible fruit  $\lceil r \rceil$ .

XXIII. The pompous accounts which the par The labour pal missionaries have given of the vast success of of the Roman mistheir labours among all these Grecian sects, are sionaries equally destitute of candour and truth. It is evi- among all dent, from testimonies of the best and most re- produce litfpectable authority, that, in some of these countries, they do nothing more than administer clandestine baptism to sick infants who are committed to their care, as they appear in the ficti-

[n] See Assemani Biblioth. Orient. Vatican. tom. iii. par. I. p. 615.—Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, tom. ii. p. 1084.

[q] Memoires des Missions de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome iii.

82

[o] Odor. Raynald, Annal. tom. xv. ad A. 1318. sect. iv. [p] Le Quien, Oriens Christian. tom. iii. p. 1362, and 1403. Clemens Galanus, Conciliatio Ecclesia Armenica cum Romana, tom. i. p. 527.

P. 54. [r] Urb. Cerri, Etat present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 162.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART I.

tious character of physicians [s]; and that, in other places, the whole success of their ministry, is confined to the assembling of some wretched tribes of indigent converts, whose poverty is the only bond of their attachment to the church of Rome, and who, when the papal largefles are suspended or withdrawn, fall from their pretended allegiance to Rome, and return the religion of their ancestors [t]. It happens also, from time to time, that a person of distinction, among the Greeks or Orientals, embraces the doctrine of the Latin church, promifes obedience to its pontiff, and carries matters so far as to repair to Rome to testify his respectful submis-fion to the apostolic see. But in these obsequious . steps the noble converts are almost always moved by avarice or ambition; and accordingly, upon a change of affairs, when they have obtained their purposes, and have nothing more to expect, they, in general, either suddenly abandon the church of Rome, or express their attachment to it in such ambiguous terms, as are only calculated to deceive. Those who, like the Nestorian bishop of Diarbek [u], continue stedfast in the profession of the Roman faith, and even transmit it with an appearance of zeal to

[s] Urb. Cerri, Etat present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 164—Gabr. de Chinon, Relations nouvelles du Levant, par. I. c. vi. p. 174. This Capuchin monk delivers his opinions on many subjects with frankness and candour.

[1] See Chardin's Voyages en Perse, tome i. p. 186. tome ii. p. 53. 75. 206. 271. 349, and principally tome iii. p. 433, of the last edition published in Holland, in 4to; for, in the former editions, all the scandalous transactions of the Roman missionaries among the Armenians, Colchians, Iberians, and Persans, are entirely wanting.—See also Chinon, Relations de Levant, par. II. p. 308, which regards the Armenians; and Maillet, Description d'Egypte, tome iii. p. 65, which is relative to the Copts.

[u] Otherwise named Amida and Caramit.

their

CENT.

their posterity, are excited to this perseverance by no other motive than the uninterrupted liberality of the Roman pontiff.

On the other hand, the bishops of Rome are extremely attentive and assiduous in employing all the methods in their power to maintain and extend their dominion among the Christians of the East. For this purpose, they treat, with the greatest lenity and indulgence, the proselytes they have made in these parts of the world, that their yoke may not appear intolerable. They even carry this indulgence so far, as to shew evidently, that they are actuated more by a love of power, than by an attachment to their own doctrines and institutions. For they not only allow the Greek and other eastern proselytes the liberty of retaining, in their public worship, the rites and cere-monies of their ancestors (though in direct opposition to the religious service of the church of Rome), and of living in a manner repugnant to the customs and practice of the Latin world; but, what is much more furprising, they suffer the peculiar doctrines, that distinguish the Greeks and Orientals from all other Christian societies, to remain in the public religious books of the proselytes already mentioned, and even to be reprinted at Rome in those that are sent abroad for their use  $\lceil w \rceil$ . The truth of the matter seems to Assemblains, in many passages of his Biblioth. Orient. Vatican. that even the very books that were printed at Rome for the use of the Nestorians, Jacobites, and Armenians, were not corrected or purged from the errors peculiar to these sects; and he looks upon this negligence as the reason of the desection of many Roman converts, and of their return to the bosom of the eastern and Greek churches, to which they originally belonged.—See, on the other hand, the Lettres Choises de R. Simon, tome ii. let. xxiii. p. 156, in which the author pretends to defend this conduct of the Romanists, which some attribute to indolence and neglect, others to artisice and prudence.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART L

The Maronites. be briefly this: That at Rome, a Greek, an Aramenian, or a Copt, is looked upon as an obedient child, and a worthy member of the church, if he acknowleges the supreme and unlimited power of the Roman pontiff over all the Christian world.

XXIV. The Maronites who inhabit the mounts Libanus and Anti-Libanus, date their subjection to the spiritual jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff from the time that the Latins carried their hostile arms into Palestine, with a view to make themselves masters of the Holy Land [x]. This subjection

[x] The Maronite doctors, and more especially those who refide at Rome, maintain, with the greatest efforts of zeal and argument, that the religion of Rome has always been preserved among them in its purity, and exempt from any mixture of herely or error. The proof of this affertion has been attempted, with great labour and industry, by Faust. Nairon, in his Differtatio de origine, nomine, ac religione, Maronitarum, published in 8vo. at Rome, in the year 1679. It was from this treatise, and some other Maronite writers, that De la Roque drew the materials of his discourses concerning the origin of the Maronites, together with the abridgment of their history, which he inserted in the second volume of his Voyage de Syrie et du Mont Liban, p. 28, &c. But neither this hypotheus, nor the authorities by which it is supported, have any weight with the most learned men of the Roman church; who maintain, that the Maronites derived their origin from the Monophysites, and adhered to the doctrine of the Monothelites *, until the twelfth century, when they embraced the communion of Rome. See R. Simon, Histoire Critique des Chretiens Orientaux, ch. xiii. p. 146.—Euseb. Renaudot, Histor. Patriarch. Alexand. in Prefat. iii. 2. in Histor. p. 49. The very learned Assemanus, who was himself a Maronite, steers a middle way between these two opposite accounts, in his Biblioth. Orient. Vatic. tom. i. p. 496. while the matter in debate is lest undecided by Mich. le Quien, in his Oriens Christianus, tom. iii. p. 1. where he gives an account of the Maronite church and its spiritual rulers.—For my own part I am persuaded, that those who consider that all the Maronites have not as yet embraced the faith, or acknowledged the invitdiction of Rome, will be little disposed to receive with credulity the jection however was agreed to, with this express CENT. condition, that neither the popes nor their emiffaries should pretend to change or abolish any thing that related to the ancient rites, moral precepts, or religious opinions, of this people: so that in reality, among the Maronites, there is nothing to be found that savours of popery, if we except their attachment to the Roman pontiff [y], who is obliged to pay very dear for their friendship. For, as they live in the utmost distress of poverty, under the tyrannical yoke of infidels, the bishop of Rome is under a necessity of furnishing them with such subsidies as may appease the voracity of their op-

* Those who maintained, that, notwithstanding the two natures in Christ, viz. the human and the divine, there was, nevertheless, but one will, which was the divine.

the affertions of certain Maronite priests, who are, after the manner of the Syrians, much addicted to boasting and exaggeration. Certain it is, that there are Maronites in Syria, who still behold the church of Rome with the greatest aversion and abhorrence; and, what is still more remarkable, great numbers of that nation reliding in Italy, even under the eye of the pontiff, opposed his authority during the last century, and threw the court of Rome into great perplexity. One body of these non-conforming Maronites retired into the valleys of Piedmont, where they joined the Waldenses; another, above fix hundred in number, with a bishop and several ecclefiaftics at their head, fled into Corsica, and implored the protection of the republic of Genoa against the violence of the inquisitors. See Urb. Cerri's Etat present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 121. Now may it not be asked here, What could have excited the Maronites in Italy to this public and vigorous opposition to the Roman pontiff, if it be true that their opinions were in all respects conformable to the doctrines and decrees of the church of Rome? This opposition could not have been owing to any thing but a difference in point of doctrine and belief; fince the church of Rome allowed, and still allows the Maronites, under its jurisdiction, to retain and perform the religious rites and institutions that have been handed down to them from their ancestors, and to follow the precepts and rules of life to which they have always been accustomed. Compare with the authors above cited, Thefaur. Epiftol. Crozian. tom. i. p. 11.

[ ] The reader will do well to consult principally on this fubject, the observations subjoined by Rich. Simon to his French translation of the Italian Jesuit Dandini's Voyage to Mount Libanus, published in 12mo. at Paris, in 1685. See also Euseb.

Renaudot's Historia Patriarch. Alexandr. p. 548.

preffors,

CENT. XVI SECT. III. PART I.

pressors, procure a subsistence for their bishop and clergy, provide all things requisite for the support of their churches and the uninterrupted exercise of public worship, and contribute in general to lessen their misery. Besides, the college erected at Rome by Gregory XIII. with a view of instructing the young men, frequently sent from Syria, in the various branches of useful science and sacred erudition, and prepossessing them with an early veneration and attachment for the Roman pontiff, is attended with a very confiderable expence. The Maronite patriarch performs his spiritual functions at Canobin, a convent of the monks of St. Anthony, on mount Libanus, which is his constant residence. He claims the title of Patriarch of Antioch, and always assumes the name of Peter, as if he seemed desirous of being confidered as the successor of that apostle [z].

[2] See Petitqueux, Voyage a Canobin dans le Mont Liban, in the Nouveaux Mémoires des Missions de la Compagnie de Jesus, tome iv. p. 252, and tome viii. p. 355.—La Roque, Voyage de Syrie, tome ii. p. 10.—Laur. D'Arvieux, Memoires, ou Voyages, tome ii. p. 418.

THE

SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

SECTION III.

PART II.

The HISTORY OF THE MODERN CHURCHES.

CHAP. I.

The History of the Lutheran Church.

L THE rife and progress of the Evangelical or Lutberan church, have been already related, so far as they belong to the history of "Al the Reformation. The former title was assumed by that church in consequence of the original mencement design of its founder, which was to restore to of the Laits native lustre the gospel of Christ, that had so theren long been covered with the darkness of superstition, or, in other words, to place in its proper and true light that important doctrine, which represents salvation as attainable by the merits of Christ alone. Nor did the church, now under consideration, discover any reluctance to an adoption of the name of the great man, whom Providence employed as the honoured instrument of its foundation and establishment. A natural sentiment of gratitude to him, by whose ministry the clouds of superstition had been chiefly dispelled, who had destroyed the claims of pride and selfsufficiency, exposed the vanity of confidence in the intercession of saints and martyrs, and pointed out the Son of God as the only proper object of trust trust to miserable mortals, excited his followers to assume his name, and to call their community the Lutheran Church.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

The rife of this church must be dated from that remarkable period, when pope Leo X. drove Martin Luther, with his friends and followers, from the bosom of the Roman hierarchy, by a solemn and violent sentence of excommunication. It began to acquire a regular form, and a considerable degree of stability and consistence, from the year 1530, when the system of doctrine and morality it had adopted, was drawn up and presented to the diet of Augsburg. And it was raised to the dignity of a lawful and complete hierarchy, totally independent of the laws and jurisdiction of the Roman pontiss, in consequence of the treaty concluded at Passau, in the year 1552, between Charles V. and Maurice elector of Saxony, relating to the religious affairs of the empire.

The form and fubstance of its religious doctrine.

II. The great and leading principle of the Lutheran church, is, that the Holy Scriptures are the only fource from which we are to draw our religious sentiments, whether they relate to faith or practice; and that these inspired writings are, in all matters that are essential to salvation, so plain, and so easy to be thoroughly understood, that their fignification may be learned, without the aid of an expositor, by every person of common fense, who has a competent knowledge of the language in which they are composed. There are, indeed, certain formularies adopted by this church, which contain the principal points of its doctrine, ranged for the fake of method and perspicuity, in their natural order. But these books have no authority but what they derive from the scriptures of truth, whose sense and meaning they are designed to convey; nor are the Lutheran doctors permitted to interpret or explain these books

Chap. I. The History of the Lutheran Church.

books so as to draw from them any propositions CENT.
that are inconsistent with the express declarations XVI. of the word of God. The Confession of Augsburg, and the annexed Defence of it against the objections of the Roman catholic doctors, may be deemed the chief and the most respectable of these human productions [a]. In the next rank may be placed the

[a] When the confession of Augsburg had been presented to the diet of that city, the Roman catholic doctors were employed to refute the doctrines it contained; and this pretended refutation was also read to that august assembly. A reply was immediately drawn up by Melancthon, and presented to the emperor; who, under the pretext of a pacific spirit, refused to receive it. This reply was afterwards published, under the title of Apologia Confessionis Augustana; and is the defence of that confession, mentioned by Dr. Motheim as annexed to it. To speak plainly, Melancthon's love of peace and concord feems to have carried him beyond what he owed to the truth, in composing this defence of the confession of Augsburg. In that edition of the Defence which some Lutherans (and Chytrzus among others) look upon as the most genuine and authentic, Melancthon makes several strange concessions to the church of Rome; whether through servile fear, excessive charity, or hesitation of mind, I will not pretend to determine. He speaks of the presence of Christ's body in the eucharist in the very strongest terms that the catholics use to express the monstrous doctrine of Transubstantiation, and adopts those remarkable words of Theophylact, that ' the bread was not a figure only, but was truly changed into flesh.' He approves that canon of the mass, in which the priest prays that ' the bread may be changed in-to the body of Christ.' It is true, that in some subsequent editions of the defence or apology now under confideration, these obnoxious passages were omitted, and the phraseology that had given such just offence, was considerably mitigated. There is an ample account of this whole affair, together with a history of the dissensions of the Lutheran church, in the vahuable and learned work of Hospinian, entitled, "Historize Sacramentariæ Pars posterior,' p. 199. & seq. pressions, in Melancthon's Apologia, will appear still more surpriling, when we recollect that, in the course of the debates concerning the manner of Christ's presence in the eucharist, he, at length, seemed to lean visibly towards the opinions of Bucer and Calvin; and that, after his death, his followers were censured and persecuted in Saxony on this account, under the denomination CENT. XVI. BECT. HI. PART II. the Articles of Smalcalde [b], as they are commonly called, together with the shorter and larger Cate-chisms of Luther, designed for the instruction of youth, and the improvement of persons of riper years. To these standard-books most churches add the Form of Concord; which, though it be not universally received, has not, on that account, occasioned any animosity or disunion, as the few points that prevent its being adopted by some churches are of an indifferent nature [c], and do not, denomination of Philippists. This shews either that the great man now under consideration changed his opinions, or that he had formerly been seeking union and concord at the expense of truth.

calde by Luther, on occasion of a meeting of the protestant electors, princes, and states at that place. They were principally designed to shew how far the Lutherans were disposed to go, in order to avoid a final rupture, and in what sense they were willing to adopt the doctrine of Christ's presence in the eucharist. And though the terms in which these articles are expressed, be somewhat dubious, yet they are much less harsh and disgusting than those used in the Confession, the Apology, and the Form of Concord.

[c] Dr. Mosheim, like an artful painter, shades those objects in the history of Lutheranism which it is impossible to expose with advantage to a full view. Of this nature was the conduct of the Lutheran doctors in the deliberations relating to the famous Form of Concord here mentioned; a conduct that discovered such an imperious and uncharitable spirit, as would have been more confisent with the genius of the court of Rome than with the principles of a protestant church. The reader who is defirous of an ample demonstration of the truth and justice of this censure, has only to consult the learned work of Rod. Hospinian, entitled, Concordia Discors, seu de Origine et Progressa Formulæ Concordise Bergensis.' The history of this remarkable production is more amply related in the thirty-ninth and following paragraphs of this first chapter, and in the notes, which the translator has taken the liberty to add there, in order to cast a proper light upon some things that are too interesting to be viewed superficially. In the mean time I shall only observe that the points in the Form of Concord, that prevented its being universally received, are not of such an indifferent nature not, in any degree, affect the grand and fundamental principles of true religion [d].

CENT.

III. The form of public worship, and the rites and ceremonies that were proper to be admitted as a part of it, gave rise to disputes in several monies and places, during the infancy of the Lutheran church. Some were inclined to retain a greater number of Lutheran the ceremonies and customs that had been so exceffively multiplied in the church of Rome, than feemed either lawful or expedient to others. The latter, after the example of the Helvetic formers, had their views entirely turned towards that simplicity and gravity which characterised the Christian worship in the primitive times; while the former were of opinion, that some indulgence was to be shewn to the weakness of the multitude, and some regard paid to institutions that had acquired a certain degree of weight through long But as these contending established custom. parties were both persuaded that the ceremonial part of religion was, generally speaking, a matter of human institution, and that consequently a diversity of external rites might be admitted among different churches professing the same religion, without any prejudice to the bonds of charity and fraternal union, these disputes could not be of any long duration. In the mean time, all those ceremonies and observances of the church of as Dr. Mosheim seems to imagine. To maintain the ubiquity " or omnipresence of Christ's body, together with its real and peculiar presence, in the eucharist, and to exclude from their communion the protestants, who denied these palpable absurdities, was the plan of the Lutheran doctors in composing and recommending the Form of Concord; and this plan can neither be looked upon as a matter of pure indifference, nor as a mark of Christian charity.

The cerepublic worthip of the

[d] See, for an account of the Lutheran confessions of faith, Christ. Kocheri Biblioth. Theologia Symbolica, p. 114. Rome. CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

Rome, whether of a public or private nature, that carried palpable marks of error and superstition, were every where rejected without hesitation; and wise precautions were used to regulate the forms of public worship in such a manner, that the genuine fruits of piety should not be choked by multitude of infignificant rites. Besides, every church was allowed to retain so much of the ancient form of worship as might be still obferved without giving offence, and as seemed suited to the character of the people, the genius of the government, and the nature and circumstances of the place where it was founded. Hence it has happened, that, even so far down as the present times, the Lutheran churches differ considerably one from another, with respect both to the number and nature of their religious, ceremonies; a circumstance so far from tending to their dishonour, that it is, on the contrary, a very striking proof of their wisdom and moderation [e].

Concerning the vifible head, and the form of government of the Lutheran church.

IV. The supreme civil rulers of every Lutheran state are clothed also with the dignity, and perform the functions of supremacy in the church. The very essence of civil government seems manifestly to point out the necessity of investing the sovereign with this spiritual supremacy [f], and the tacit consent of the Lutheran churches has consirmed the dictates of wise policy in this respect. It must not, however, be imagined, that the an-

[e] See Balth. Meisnerius, Lib. de Legibus, lib. iv. art. iv. quælt. iv. p. 662—666.—Jo. Adam Scherzerus, Breviar. Hulsemann. Enucl. p. 1313—1321.

[f] Since nothing is more inconsistent with that subordination and concord, which are among the great ends of civil government, than imperium in imperio, i. e. two independent sovereignties in the same body politic, the genius of government, equally with the spirit of genuine Christianity, proclaims the equity of that constitution, which makes the head of the state, the supreme visible ruler of the church.

cient

fiaftical affairs have been totally abolished by this constitution of things; since it is certain, that the vestiges of the authority exercised by them in the primitive times, though more striking in one place than in another, are yet more or less visible every where. Besides, it must be carefully remembered, that all civil rulers of the Lutheran persuasion are effectually restrained, by the fundamental principles of the doctrine they profess, from any attempts to change or destroy the established rule of saith and manners, to make any alteration in the essential doctrines of their religion, or in any thing that is intimately connected with them, or to impose their particular opinions upon their subjects in a despotic and arbitrary manner.

The councils, or societies, appointed by the sovereign to watch over the interests of the church, and to govern and direct its affairs, are composed of persons conversant both in civil and ecclesiastical law, and, according to a very ancient denomination, are called Consistories. The internal government of the Lutheran church seems equally removed from episcopacy on the one hand, and from presbyterianism on the other, if we except the kingdoms of Sweden and Denmark, which retain the form of ecclesiastical government that preceded the reformation, purged, indeed, from the superstitions and abuses that rendered it so odious [g]. This constitution of the hierarchy of the Lutherans will not seem surprising, when the sentiments

flops and superintendants, under the inspection and authority of the sovereign. The archbishop of Upsal is primate of Sweden, and the only archbishop among the Lutherans. The luxury and licentiousness that too commonly flow from the opulence of the Roman catholic clergy, are unknown in these two northern states; since the revenues of the prelate now mentioned do not amount to more than 400 pounds yearly, while those of the bishops are proportionally small.

(ENT XVL SECT. III. PART IL

timents of that people, with respect to ecclesialical polity, are duly confidered. On the one hand, they are persuaded that there is no law, of divine authority, which points out a diffinction between the minitiers of the gospel, with respect to rank, dignity, or prerogatives; and therefore they recede from episcopacy. But, on the other hand, they are of opinion, that a certain subordination, a diversity in point of rank and privileges among the clergy, are not only highly useful, but also necessary to the perfection of church communion, by connecting more closely, in consequence of a mutual dependence, the members of the same body; and thus they avoid the uniformity of the presbyterian government. They are not, however, agreed with respect to the extent of this subordination, and the degrees of superiority and precedence that ought to distinguish their doctors; for, in some places, this is regulated with much more regard to the ancient rules of churchgovernment, than is discovered in others. As the divine law is filent on this head, different opinions may be entertained, and different forms of ecclefialtical polity adopted, without a breach of Christian charity and fraternal union.

The Luthepublic wor-. ship, and method of instructing.

V. Every, country has its own Liturgies, which ran littingies, are the rules of proceeding in every thing that relates to external worship and the public exercise of religion. These rules, however, are not of an immutable nature, like those institutions which bear the stamp of a divine authority, but may be augmented, corrected, or illustrated, by the order of the sovereign, when such changes appear evidently to be necessary or expedient. The liturgies used in the different countries that have embraced the system of Luther, agree perfectly in all the effential branches of religion, in all matters that can be looked upon as of real moment and importance; but they differ widely in many things in indifferent nature, concerning which the CENT. 7 Scriptures are silent, and which compose that of the public religion that derives its authority the wisdom and appointment of men. Assemfor the celebration of divine worship meet y where at stated times. Here the holy scrip-3 are read publicly, prayers and hymns are essed to the Deity, the sacraments are admired, and the people are instructed in the knowof religion, and excited to the practice of e by the discourses of their ministers. The It methods are used for the religious education outh, who are not only carefully instructed in elements of Christianity in the public schools, are also examined by the pastors of the churches hich they belong, in a public manner, in order he farther improvement of their knowlege, the more vigorous exertion of their faculties ne study of divine truth. Hence, in almost y province, Catechisms, which contain the itial truths of religion, and the main precepts norality, are published and recommended by authority of the sovereign, as rules to be foled by the masters of schools, and by the miniof the church, both in their private and public uctions. But, as Luther left behind him an rate and judicious production of this kind, in ch the fundamental principles of religion and ality are explained and confirmed with the test perspicuity and force, both of evidence and ression, this compendious Catechism of that nent reformer is universally adopted as the first oduction to religious knowlege, and is one of Randard-books of that church which bears his And, indeed, all the provincial catechisms no more than illustrations and enlargements of excellent abridgement of faith and practice.

VI. Among

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. III.
PART II.
The bolidays, and eccleliastical discipline of the Lutheran church.

VI. Among the days that are deemed facred in the Lutheran church (besides that which is celebrated every week in memory of Christ's refurrection from the dead), we may reckon all fuch as were fignalized by those glorious and important events that proclaimed the celestial mission of the Saviour, and the divine authority of his holy religion [b]. For these sacred festivals, the grateful and well-grounded piety of ancient times had always professed the highest veneration. But the Lutheran church has gone yet farther; and, to avoid giving offence to weak brethren, has retained several which feem to have derived the respect that is paid to them, rather from the suggestions of superstition than from the dictates of true religion. There are some churches that carry the desire of multiplying festivals so far, as to observe religiously the days formerly fet apart for celebrating the memory of the twelve apostles.

It is well known, that the power of excommunication, i. e. of banishing from its bosom obstinate and scandalous transgressors, was a privilege enjoyed and exercised by the church from the remotest antiquity; and it is no less certain, that this privilege was often perverted to the most iniquitous and odious purposes. The founders of the Lutheran church, therefore, undertook to remove the abuses and corruptions under which this branch of ecclesiastical discipline laboured, and to restore it to its primitive purity and vigour. At first their attempt seemed to be crowned with success; since it is plain, that, during the fixteenth century, no opposition of any moment was made to the wife and moderate exercise of this spiritual authority. But, in process of time, this privilege fell im-rection, and afcention of the Son of God; the descent of the Holy Spirit upon the apostles on the day of pentecost, &c.

ceptibly into contempt; the terror of excom- CENT. unication lost its force; and ecclesiastical discine was reduced to such a shadow, that, in most ices, there are scarcely any remains or traces of at this day. This change may be partly attrited to the corrupt propensities of mankind, who e naturally desirous of destroying the influence every institution that is designed to curb their entious passions. It must, however, be acknowged, that the relaxation of ecclesiastical discipline is.not owing to this cause alone; other circuminces concurred to diminish the respect and subiffion that had been paid to the spiritual tribunal. n the one hand, the clergy abused this important ivilege in various ways; some misapplying the verity of excommunication through ignorance or iprudence, while others impiously perverted an stitution, in itself extremely useful, to satisfy their ivate resentments, and to avenge themselves of ofe who had dared to offend them. On the her hand, the counsels of certain persons in ower, who considered the privilege of excomunicating in the hands of the clergy as deroatory from the majesty of the sovereign, and deimental to the interests of civil society, had no nall influence in bringing this branch of spiritual risdiction into disrepute. It is however certain, hat whatever causes may have contributed to roduce this effect, the effect itself was much to e lamented, as it removed one of the most powerul restraints upon iniquity. Nor will it appear urprising, when this is duly considered, that the nanners of the Lutherans are so remarkably deraved, and that, in a church which is almost leprived of all authority and discipline, multiudes affront the public by their audacious irregularities, and transgress, with a shameless impulence, through the prospect of impunity.

VII. The

CENT.
XVI.

SECT. III.

PART 11.

Of the profperous and calamitous events that have happened to the Lutheran church.

VII. The prosperous and unfavourable events that belong to the history of the Lutheran church, since the happy establishment of its liberty and independence, are neither numerous nor remarkable, and may consequently be mentioned in a few The rife and progress of this church, before its final and permanent establishment, have been already related; but that very religious peace, which was the instrument of its stability and independence, set bounds, at the same time, to its progress in the empire, and prevented it effectually from extending its limits [i]. Near the close of this century, Gebhard, archbishop of Cologne, evinced a wish to enter into its communion, and, having contracted the bonds of matrimony, formed the design of introducing the reformation into his dominions. But this arduous attempt, which was in direct contradiction to the famous Ecclesiastical Reservation [k] stipulated in the articles of the peace of religion concluded at Aug sburg, proved abortive; and the prelate was obliged to resign his dignity, and to abandon his country [1]. On the other hand, it is certain, that the adversaries of the Lu-

[i] The reason of this will be seen in the following note.

[k] In the diet of Augsburg, which was assembled in the year 1555, in order to execute the treaty of Passau, the several states that had already embraced the Lutheran religion, were confirmed in the sull enjoyment of their religious liberty. To prevent, however, as far as was possible, the farther progress of the reformation, Charles V. stipulated for the catholics the samous ecclesiastical Reservation; by which it was decreed, that if any archbishop, prelate, bishop, or other ecclesiastic, should, in time to come, renounce the faith of Rome, his dignity and benefice should be forseited, and his place be silled by the chapter or college, possessed of the power of election.

[1] Sec Jo. Dav. Koleri Dissertatio de Gebhardo Truchsessio-Jo. Pet. à Ludewig Reliquie MStorum omnis evi, tom, v. p. 383.—See also a German work entitled Unsebuldige Nachrichien, A. 1748. p. 484.

theran

theran church were not permitted to disturb its CENT. tranquillity, or to hurt, in any effential point, its liberty, prosperity, and independence. Their intentions, indeed, were malignant enough; and it appeared evident, from many striking circumstances, that they were secretly projecting a new attack upon the protestants, with a view to annul the treaty of Passau, which had been confirmed at Augsburg, and to have them declared public enemies to the empire. Such was undoubtedly the unjust and seditious design of Francis Burckhard, in composing the famous book de Autonomia, which was published in the year 1586; and also of Pistorius, in drawing up the Reasons, which the margrave of Baden alleged in vindication of his returning from Lutheranism into the bosom of popery[m]. These writers, and others of the same stamp, treated the Religious Peace, negotiated at Passau, and ratified at Augsburg, as unjust, because it was obtained by force of arms, and as null, because concluded without the knowlege and consent of the Roman pontiff. They pretended also to prove, that by the changes and interpolations, which they affirmed to have been made by Melancthon, in the confession of Augsburg, after it had been presented to the diet, the protestants forfeited all the privileges and advantages that they derived from the treaty now mentioned. The latter accusation gave rise to long and warm debates during this and the following century. Many learned and ingenious productions were published on that occasion, in which the Lutheran divines proved, with the utmost perspicuity and force of argument, that the Confession of Augsburg was preserved in their church in its original state, uncorrupted by any mixture, and that none of their brethren had ever departed in

[m] See Chr. Aug. Salig, Histor. August. Confessionis, tom.i. lib. iv. cap. iii. p. 767.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PERT IL

They that felt most sensibly the bitter and implacable hatred of the papists against the doctrine and worship of the Lutheran church (which they disdainfully called the new religion), were such members of that church as lived in the territories of Roman-catholic princes. This is more especially true of the protestant subjects of the house of Austria [6], who experienced, in the most affecting manner, the dire effects of bigotry and superstition seated on a throne, and who lost the greatest part of their liberty before the conclusion of this century.

The flate of learning among the Latherans.

VIII. While the votaries of Rome were those meditating the ruin of the Lutheran church, and exerting, for this purpose, all the powers of secret artifice and open violence, the followers of Luther were assiduously bent on descating their esforts, and lest no means unemployed, that seemed proper to maintain their own doctrine, and to strengthen their cause. The calamities they had suffered were fresh in their remembrance; and hence they were admonished to use all possible precautions to prevent their falling again into the like unhappy circumstances. Add, to this, the zeal of princes and men [s] See Salig, Hist. August. Consessions, tom. i.— It cannot indeed be denied, that Melancthon corrected and altered some passages of the Consession of Augsburg. It is certain, that, in the year 1555, he made use of the extraordinary credit and instruence he then had, to introduce among the Saxon churches an edition of that consession, which was not only corrected in several places, but was, moreover, upon the whole, very different from the original one. But his conduct in this step, which was extremely audacious, or at least highly imprudent, never received the approbation of the Lutheran church, nor was the Augsburg Consession, in this new shape, ever admitted as one of the standard-books of its faith and doctrine.

[o] See the Austria Evangelica of the learned Raupachius, tom. i. p. 152. tom. ii. p. 287. This work is composed in the German language.

n power for the advancement of true religion, CENT. which, it must be acknowleged, was much greater this century, than it is in the times in which we PART U. ive. Hence the original confederacy that had been formed among the German princes for the mainenance of Lutheranism, and of which the elector of Saxony was the chief, gradually acquired new trength; and foreign sovereigns, particularly those of Sweden and Denmark, were invited to enter nto this grand alliance. And as it was univerfally agreed, that the stability and lustre of the rising church depended much on the learning of its ministers, and the progress of the sciences, among those in general who professed its doctrines, so the greatest part of the confederate princes promoted, with the utmost zeal, the culture of letters, and banished, wherever their falutary influence could extend, that baneful ignorance which is the parent of superstition. The academical institutions founded by the Lutherans, at Jena, Helmstadt, and Altorf, and by the Calvinists at Francker, Leyden, and other places; the ancient universities reformed and accommodated to the constitution and exigences of a ourer church than that under whose influence they had been at first established; the great number of schools that were opened in almost every city; the imple rewards, together with the distinguished honours and privileges that were bestowed on men of learning and genius; all these circumstances bear honourable testimony to the generous zeal of the German princes for the advancement of useful knowlege. These noble establishments were undoubtedly expensive, and required large funds for their support. These were principally drawn from the revenues and possessions, which the piety or superstition of ancient times had consecrated to the multiplication of convents, the erection or embellish-T 4

CENT. XVL. SECT. III. PART II. The study of Belles Lettres and languages promoted.

bellishment of churches, and other religious uses.

IX. These generous and zealous efforts in the cause of learning were attended with remarkable fuccess. Almost all the liberal arts and sciences were cultivated with emulation, and brought to greater degrees of perfection. All those, whose views were turned to the service of the church, were obliged to apply themselves, with diligence and assiduity, to the study of Greek, Hebrew, and Latin literature, in order to qualify them for performing, with dignity and success, the duties of the facred function; and it is well known that in these branches of erudition several Lutheran doctors excelled in such a manner, as to acquire a deathless name in the republic of letters. Melancthon, Cario, Chytræus, Reineccius, and others, were eminent for their knowlege of history. More particularly Matthias Flacius, one of the authors of the Centuriæ Mazdeburgenses* (that immortal work, which restored to the light of evidence and truth the facts relating to the rife and progress of the Christian church, which had been covered with thick darkness, and corrupted by innumerable fables), may be deservedly considered as the parent of ecclesiastical history. Nor should we omit mentioning the learned Martin Chemnitz, to whose Examination of the Decrees of the Council of Trent, the history of religion is more indebted, than many, at this day, are apt to imagine. While fo many branches of learning were cultivated with zeal, some, it must be confessed, were too little pursued. Among these we may place the history of literature and philosophy, the important science of criticism, the study of antiquities, and other objects of erudition connected with them. It is, however, to be observed, that notwithstanding the neglect with which these branches of science seemed too generally to be treated, the foundations of their culture and improvement in future ages were really laid in this century. On the other hand, it is remarkable that Latin eloquence and poetry were carried to a very high degree of improvement, and exhibited orators and poets of the first order; from which circumstance alone it may be fairly concluded, that, if all the branches of literature and philosophy were not brought to that pitch of perfection, of which they were susceptible, this was not owing to the want of industry or genius, but rather to the restraints imposed upon genius by the infelicity of the times. All the votaries of science, whom a noble emulation excited to the pursuit of literary fame, were greatly animated by the example, the influence, and the instructions of Melancthon, who was deservedly considered as the great and leading doctor of the Lutheran church, and whose sentiments, relating both to sacred and profane erudition, were so generally respected, that scarcely any had the courage to oppose them. the next rank to this eminent reformer may be mentioned Joachim Camerarius of Leipsic, a shining ornament to the republic of letters in this century, who, by his zeal and application, contributed much to promote the cause of universal learning, and more especially the study of elegant literature.

fued,

* The joint authors of this famous work (besides Flacius Illyricus) were Nicolaus Gallus, Johannes Wigandus, and Matthias Judex, all ministers of Magdeburg; and they were affisted by Caspar Nidpruckius, an Imperial counsellor, Johannes Baptista Heincelius, an Augustinian, Basil Faber, and others.

281

X. The revolutions of philosophy among the The various Lutheran doctors were many and various. Luther losophy and Melancthon seemed to set out with a re- among the folution to banish every species of philosophy [ p ] from the church; and though it is impossible to justify entirely this part of their conduct. yet they are less to be blamed than those scholastic doctors whose barbarous method of teaching philofophy was extremely difguiling, and who, by a miserable abuse of the subtile precepts of Aristotle, had perverted the dictates of common fense, and introduced the greatest obscurity and confusion both into philosophy and religion. But though these abuses led the two great men now mentioned too far, and were carrying them into the opposite extreme; yet their own recollection suspended their precipitation, and they both perceived, before it was too late, that true philosophy was necessary to restrain the licentious flights of mere genius and fancy, and to guard the fanctuary of religion against the inroads of superstition and enthusiasm [q]. It was in confequence of this perfuation that Melandthon composed, in a plain and familiar style, abridgements of almost all the branches of philofophy, which, during many years, were explained publicly to the studious youth in all the Lutheran academies and schools of learning. This celebrated reformer may not improperly be confidered as an eclectic; for, though in many points he followed Arillotle, and retained fome degree of propentity want of better information, have pretended that Luther rejected the scholastic philosophy through a total ignorance of its nature and precepts. Those who have ventured upon such an affertion must have been themselves as agnorant of the history of literature in general, as of the industry and erudium of Luther in particular. For a demonstrative proof of the see Brucker's Historia Critica Philosophy.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

[p] See Christ. Aug. Heumanni Ada philosophor. art. ii. part X. p. 579.—Io. Herm. ab Elswich, Different. de varia Aristotelia fortuna in Scholia Protepantium, which Launoy has pretixed to his book, de fortuna Aristotelia in Academia Parifocosi, sect. viii. p. 15. sect. xiii. p. 36.

to the ancient philosophy of the schools, yet he drew many things from the fecundity of his own genius, and often had recourse also to the doctrines of the Platonills and Stoics.

XI. This method of teaching philosophy, however Philosorecommendable on account of its simplicity and phiral sect. perspicuity, did not long enjoy, alone and unrivaled, and Ramethe great credit and authority it had obtained. Certain acute and subtile doctors, having perceived that Melancthon, in composing his Abridgements, had discovered a peculiar and predominant attachment to the philosophy of Aristotle, thought it was better to go to the source, than to drink at the ftream; and therefore read and explained to their disciples the works of the Stagirite. On the other hand, it was observed, that the Jesuits, and other votaries of Ronte, artfully made use of the ambiguous terms and the intricate fophistry of the ancient schoolmen, in order to puzzle the protestants, and to reduce them to silence, when they particularly wished for such arguments as were calculated to produce conviction. And, therefore, many protestant doctors thought it might be advantageous to their cause to have the studious youth instructed in the mysteries of the Aristotelian phi-losophy, as it was taught in the schools, that thus they might be qualified to defend themselves with the same weapons with which they were attacked. Hence there arose, towards the conclusion of this century, three philosophical sects, the Melancthonian, the Aristotelian, and the Scholastic. The first declined gradually, and soon disappeared: while the other two imperceptibly grew into one, acquired new vigour by this coalition, increased daily in reputation and influence, and were adopted in all the schools of learning. It is true, that the followers of Ramus made violent inroads, in several places, upon the territories of these combined sects, and sometimes with a certain appearance of fuccels;

CENT. fuccess; but their hopes were transitory; for after XVI. various struggles they were obliged to yield, and were, at length, entirely banished from the schools [r].

The Paracelfifts, or Fire philosophers.

XII. Such also was the fate of the disciples of Paracelsus, who, from the grand principle of their physical system, were called Fire Philosophers [s], and who aimed at nothing less than the total subversion of the peripatetic philosophy, and the introduction of their own reveries into the public schools. Towards the close of this century, the Paracelfists really made a figure in almost all the countries of Europe, as their sect was patronized and supported by the genius and eloquence of several great men, who exerted themselves, with the utmost zeal and assiduity, in its cause, and endeavoured, both by their writings and their transactions, to augment its credit. In England it found an eminent defender in Robert Flood, or Fludd, a man of a very fingular genius [t], who illustrated, or at least attempted to illustrate, the philoso-denominations. They were called Theo-Sophists, from their declaiming against human reason as a dangerous and deceitful guide, and their representing a divine and supernatural illumination as the only means of arriving at truth. They were called Philosophi per ignem, i. e. Fire-Philosophers, from their maintaining that the intimate essences of natural things were only to be known by the trying essents of fire, directed in a chemical process. They were, lastly, denominated Paracelsists, from the eminent physician and chemist of that name, who was the chief ornament and leader of that extraordinary sect.

[r] Jo. Herm. ab Elswich, de fatis Aristot. in Scholis Protest. sect. xxi. p. 54.—Jo. Georg. Walchius, Historia Logices, lib. ii. eap. i. sect. iii. v. in Parergis Academicis p. 613. 617.—Otto Fred. Schutzius, de vita Chytrei, lib. iv. sect. iv. p. 19.

the famous Dominican monk of that name, who, from his ardent pursuit of mathematical knowlege, was called the Seeker, and who, from his passion for chemistry, was su pected philosophy of Paracelsus, in a great number of CENT. treatises, which, even in our times, are not entirely destitute of readers and admirers. The same phie PART III losophy found some votaries in France, and was propagated with zeal at Paris, by a person whose name was Rivier, in opposition to the sentiments and efforts of the university of that city [u]. Its cause was industriously promoted in Denmark, by Severinus [w]; in Germany, by Kunrath, an eminent physician at Dresden, who died in the year 1605[x]; and in other countries by a confiderable number of warm votaries, who were by no means unfuccessful in augmenting its reputation, and multiplying its followers. As all these heralds of the new philosophy accompanied their instructions with a striking air of piety and devotion, and seemed, in propagating their strange system, to propose to themselves no other end than the advancement of the divine glory, and the restoration of peace and concord to a divided church; a motive, in appearance, so generous and noble could not fail to procure friends and protectors. Accordingly, we find, that towards the conclusion of this century, several persons, eminent for their piety, and distinguished by their zeal for the advancement of true religion, joined themselves to this sect. Of this number were the Lutheran doctors Weigelius, Arndius, and others, who were led into the snare by their of magic, but a famous physician born in the year 1574, at Milgate in Kent, and very remarkable for his attachment to the alchemists. See Wood's Athen. Oxoniens. vol. i. p. 610. and Hist. et Antiq. Acad. Oxoniens. lib. ii. p. 390.—P. Gassendi Examen Philosoph. Fluddanæ, tom. iii. op. p. 259.

[u] Boulay. Histor. Acad. Paris. tom. vi. p. 327, & passim. [w] Jo. Molleri Cimbria Literata, tom. i. p. 623.

[x] Cimb. Lit. tom. ii. p. 440.

CENT.

ill-grounded notions of human reason, and who AVI. apprehended that controversy and argumentation might lead men to substitute anew the pompous and intricate jargon of the schools in the place of folid and fincere piety.

The cuatroveriy between Hoffeolleagues.

XIII. Among those who discovered a propensity towards the system of the Paracelsists, or Theosoman and his phists, was the celebrated Daniel Hoffman, professor of divinity in the university of Helmstadt, who, from the year 1598, had declared open war against philosophy, and who continued to oppose it with the greatest obstinacy and violence. Alleging the weight and authority of some particular opinions of Luther, and certain passages in the writings of that great man, he extravagantly maintained, that philosophy was the mortal enemy of religion; that truth was divisible into two branches, the one philosophical and the other theological; and that what was true in philosophy, was false in theology. These absurd and pernicious tenets naturally alarmed the judicious doctors of the university, and excited a warm controversy between Hossman and his colleagues Owen Guntherus, Cornelius Martin, John Caselius, and Duncan Liddel; a controversy also of too much consequence to be confined within fuch narrow bounds, and which accordingly was carried on in other countries with the same fervour. The tumults it excited in Germany were appealed by the interpolition of Henry Julius, duke of Brunswick, who, having made a careful inquiry into the nature of this debate, and confulted the professors of the academy of Rostoch on that subject, commanded Hossman to retract publicly the invectives he had thrown out against philosophy in his writings and in his academical lectures, and to acknowlege, in the most open manner, the harmony harmony and union of found philosophy with true

and genuine theology [y].

XIV. The theological system that now prevails in the Lutheran accademies, is not of the same tenor or spirit with that which was adopted in the of theology infancy of the Reformation. As time and experience are necessary to bring all things to perfection, proved. so the doctrine of the Lutheran church changed, imperceptibly and by degrees, its original form, and was improved and perfected in many respects. This will appear both evident and striking to those who are acquainted with the history of the doctrines relating to the interpretation of scripture, free-will, predestination, and other points, and who compare the Lutheran systems of divinity of an earlier date, with those which have been composed in modern times. The case could not well be otherwise. The glorious defenders of religious liberty, to whom we owe the various bleslings of the Reformation, as they were conducted only by the suggestions of their natural sagacity, whose advances in the pursuit of knowlege are gradual and progressive, could not at once behold the truth in all its lustre, and in all its extent; but, as usually happens to persons that have been long accustomed to the darkness of ignorance, their approaches towards knowlege were flow, and their views of things very imperfect. The Lutherans were greatly affisted both in correcting and illustrating the articles of their faith, partly by the controversies which they were obliged to carry on with the Roman catholic doctors, and the disciples of Zuingle and Calvin, [y] There is an accurate account of this controverly, with an enumeration of the writings published on both sides of the question, in the life of Owen Guntherus, inserted by Mollerus in his Cimbria Literata, tom. i. p. 225.—See also Jo. Herm. ab Elswich, de fatis Aristotelis in Scholis Protestant. sect. xxvn. p 76; and a German work, by Gottfried Arnold, upon the affairs of the Church and the progress of Heresy, entitled, Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, p 947.

CENT.

The science corrected and im-

and

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. and partly by the intestine divisions that reigned among themselves, of which an account shall be given in this chapter. They have been absurdly reproached, on account of this variation in their doctrine, by Bossuet, and other papal writers, who did not consider that the founders of the Lutheran church never pretended to divine inspiration; and that it is by discovering first the errors of others, that the wise generally prepare themselves for the investigation of truth.

The flate of exegetic theology.

XV. The first and principal object that drew the attention and employed the industry of the reformers, was the exposition and illustration of the facred writings, which, according to the doctrine of the Lutheran church, contain all the treasures of celestial wisdom, all things that relate to faith and practice. Hence it happened, that the number of commentators and expositors among the Lutherans equaled that of the eminent and learned doctors who adorned that communion. head of them all, Luther and Melancthon are undoubtedly to be placed; the former, on account of the fagacity and learning, discovered in his explications of several portions of scripture, and particularly of the books of Moses, and the latter, in consequence of his commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul, and other learned labours of that kind which are abundantly known. A fecond class of expositors, of the same communion, obtained also great applause in the learned world, by their successful application to the study of the Scriptures, in which we may rank Matthias Flacius, who composed a Glossary and Key to the facred writings [z], extremely useful in unfolding the meaning of the inspired penmen; John Justus Jonas, Bugenhagius, Andrew Osian-

der,

<sup>[2]</sup> The Latin titles are Glossa Scripture Sacre, and Chrois Scripture Sacre.

der, and Martin Chemnitz, whose Harmonies of CENT. the Evangelists are not void of merit. To these we may add Victor Strigelius and Joachim Came- PART rarius; of whom the latter, in his Commentary on the New Testament, expounds the scriptures in a grammatical and critical manner only, and, laying aside all debated points of doctrine and religious controversy, unfolds the sense of each term, and the spirit of each phrase, by the rules of criticism and the genius of the ancient languages, in which he was a very uncommon proficient.

XVI. All these expositors and commentators The respecabandoned the method of the ancient interpreters, tive merits who, neglecting the plain and evident purport of interpreters; the words of scripture, were perpetually torturing their imaginations, in order to find out a mysterious sense in each word or sentence, or were hunting after infipid allusions and chimerical app plications of scripture-passages, to objects which never entered into the views of the inspired writers. On the contrary, their principal zeal and industry were employed in investigating the natural force and fignification of each expression, in consequence of that golden rule of interpretation. which Luther inculcated, That there is only one sense annexed to the words of Scripture throughout all the books of the Old and New Testament [a]. It must, however, be acknowledged, that the examples exhibited by these judicious expositors were far from being universally followed. Many, labouring under the old and inveterate disease of an irregular fancy and a scanty judgment, were still feeking hidden fignifications and double means ings in the expressions of holy writ. They were perpetually busied in twisting all the prophe-

[a] This golden rule will be found often defective and false, unless several prophetical, parabolical, and figurative expressions be excepted in its application.

CENT. XVI. cies of the Old Testament into an intimate connection with the life, sufferings, and transactions of Jesus Christ; and were over-sagacious in pre-tending to find out, in the history of the patriarchal and Jewish churches, the types and figures of the events that have happened in modern, and that may yet happen in future times. In all this they discovered more imagination than judgement; more wit than wisdom. Be that as it may, all the expositors of this age may, I think, be properly divided into two classes, with Luther at the head of the one, and Melancthon presiding in the other. Some commentators followed the example of the former, who, after a familiar explication of the sense of scripture, applied its decisions to the settlement of controverted points, and to the illustration of the doctrines and duties of religion.—Others discovered a greater propensity to the method of the latter, who first divided the discourses of the facred writers into several parts, explained them according to the rules of rhetoric, and afterwards proceeded to a more strict and almost a literal exposition of each part, taken separately, applying the refult, as rarely as was possible, to points of doctrine or matters of controversy.

Didnetic theology on doctrine of the Luthetan church. XVII. Complete fystems of theology were far from being numerous in this century. Melanchon, the most eminent of all the Lutheran doctors, collected and digested the doctrines of the church, which he so eminently adorned, into a body of divinity, under the vague title of Loci Communes, i. e. A Common-Place-Book of Theology. This compilation, which was at different times reviewed, corrected, and enlarged by its author, was in such high repute during this century, and even in succeeding times, that it was considered as a model of doctrine for all those, who either instructed the people by their public discourses, or promoted the know- CERT. lege of religion by their writings [b]. The title  $\frac{AVI}{2}$ . prefixed to this performance, indicates sufficiently the method, or rather the irregularity that reigns in the arrangement of its materials; and shews, that it was not the design of Melancthon to place the various truths of religion in that systematical concatenation, and that scientific order and connection, which are observed by the philosophers in their demonstrations and discourses, but to propose them with freedom and simplicity, as they presented themselves to his view. Accordingly, in the first editions of the book under consideration, the method observed, both in de-lineating and illustrating these important truths, is extremely plain, and is neither loaded with the terms, the definitions, nor the distinctions that abound in the writings of the philosophers. Thus did the Lutheran doctors, in the first period of the rising church, renounce and avoid, in imitation of the great reformer whose name they bear, all the abstruse reasoning, and subtile discussions, of the scholastic doctors. But the sophistry of their adversaries, and their perpetual debates with the artful champions of the church of Rome, engaged them by degrees, as has been already observed, to change their language and their methods of reasoning; so that, in process of time, the simplicity that had reigned in their theological systems, and in their manner of explaining the truths of religion, almost totally disappeared. Even Melancthon himself fell imperceptibly into the new method, or rather into the old method revived, and enlarged the subsequent editions of his Loci Communes, by the addition of feveral philosophical illustrations, designed to expose the fallacious reasonings of the Roman catholic doctors. As yet, however, the discussions philosophy were but sparingly used, and the unintelligible jargon of the schoolmen was kept at a certain distance, and seldom borrowed. But when the founders of the Lutheran church were removed by death, and the Jesuits attacked the principles of the Reformation with redoubled animosity, armed with the intricate and perplexing dialectic of the schools; then, indeed, the scene changed, and theology assumed another aspect. The stratagem employed by the Jesuits corrupted our doctors, induced them to revive that intricate and abstruse manner of defending and illustrating religious truth, which Luther and his affociates had rejected, and to introduce, into the plain and artles paths of theology, all the thorns and thistles, all the dark and devious labyrinths of the scholastic philosophy. This unhappy change was deeply lamented by several divines of eminent piety and learning about the commencement of the seventeenth century, who regretted the loss of that amiable simplicity which is the attendant on divine truth; but they could not prevail upon the professors, in the different universities, to sacrifice the jargon of the schools to the dictates of common sense, or to return to the plain, serious, and unaffected method of teaching theology that had been introduced by Luther. These obstinate doctors pleaded necessity in behalf of their scholastic divinity, and looked upon this pretended necessity as superior to all authorities, and all examples, however respectable.

[b] See Jo. Franc. Buddeus, Isagoge ad Theologiam, lib. il. cap. i. sect. xiii. tom. i. p. 381.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

The state of morality among the Lutherans.

XVIII. Those who are sensible of the intimate connexion between faith and practice, between the truths and duties of religion, will easily perceive the necessity that existed for a reformation of the corrupt morality, as well as of the superstitions doctrines, of the church of Rome. It is therefore natural, that the same persons, who CENT. had spirit enough to do the one, should think themselves obliged to attempt the other. This they accordingly attempted, and not without a certain degree of success; for it may be affirmed with truth, that more genuine piety and more excellent rules of conduct are observable in the few practical productions of Luther, Melancthon, Weller, and Rivius, to mention no more, than are to be found in the innumerable volumes of all the ancient Casuists and Moralisers [c], as they are called in the barbarous language of these remote periods. It is not, however, meant even to insinuate, that the notions of these great men concerning the important science of morality were either sufficiently accurate or extensive. It appears on the contrary, from the various debates that were carried on during this century, concerning the duties and obligations of Christians, and from the answers that were given by famous casuists to persons perplexed with religious scruples, that the true principles of morality were not yet fixed with perspicuity and precision, the agreement or difference between the laws of nature and the precepts of Christianity not sufficiently examined and determined, nor the proper diftinctions made between those parts of the gospel dispensation, which are agreeable to right reason, and those that are beyond its reach and comprehension. Had not the number of adversaries, with whom the Lutheran doctors were obliged to contend, given them perpetual employment in the field of controversy, and robbed them of that precious leisure which they might have consecrated to the advancement of real piety and virtue, they would certainly have been free from the defects now mentioned, and would, perhaps, have equaled the best moral writers of modern times. This consideration will also diminish our wonder at a circumstance, which otherwise might seem account that none of the famous Lutheran documents in give a regular system of modern times. In the contrast in peculiarly capable of reducing morals in this manner; but has inserted, on the contrary, all his practical rules and instructions under the theological articles that relate to the new, in, free-will, faith, hope, and charter.

[c] The moral writers of this century were called Moralifantes, a barbarous term, to which the English word Moralifers bears some resemblance.

The History of the Lutheran Church.

XIX. All the divines of this century were educated in the school of controversy, and so trained up to spiritual war, that an eminent theologian, and a bold and vehement disputant, were consdered as synonymous terms. It could scarcely, indeed, be otherwise, in an age when foreign quarrels and intestine divisions of a religious nature threw all the countries of Europe into a state of agitation, and obliged the doctors of the contending churches to be perpetually in action, or at least in a posture of defence. These champions of the Reformation were not, however, all animated with the same spirit, nor did they attack and defend with the same arms. Such of them as were contemporary with Luther or lived near his time, were remarkable for the simplicity of their reasoning, and attacked their adversaries with no other arguments than those which they drew from the declarations of the inspired writers, and the decisions of the ancient fathers. In the latter part of the century this method was considerably changed; and we see those doctors, who were its chief ornaments, reinforcing their use with the succours of the Aristotelian philosophy, and thus loting, in point of perspicuity CENT. and evidence, what they gained in point of subtilty and imagined science. It is true, as has PART II. been already observed more than once, that they were too naturally, though inconsiderately, led to adopt this method of disputing by the example of their adversaries the Roman catholics. latter having learned, by a disagreeable and discouraging experience, that their cause was unable to support that plain and perspicuous method of reasoning, which is the proper test of religious and moral truth, had recourse to stratagem, when evidence failed, and involved both their arguments and their opinions in the dark and intricate mazes of the scholastic philosophy; and it was this that engaged the protestant doctors to change their weapons, and to employ methods of defence unworthy of the glorious cause in which they had embarked.

iophy,

The spirit of zeal, that animated the Lutheran divines, was, in general, very far from being tempered by a spirit of charity. If we except Melancthon, in whom a predominant mildness and sweetness of natural temper triumphed over the contagious ferocity of the times, all the disputants of this century discovered too much bitterness and animosity in their transactions and in their writings. Luther himself appears at the head of this sanguine tribe, whom he far surpassed in invectives and abuse, treating his adversaries with the most brutal asperity, and sparing neither rank nor condition, however elevated or respectable they might be. It must indeed be confessed. that the criminal nature of this asperity and vehemence will be much alleviated, when they are considered in one point of view with the genius of these barbarous times, and the odious cruelty and injustice of the virulent enemies, whom the oppressed reformers were called to en-

ş

CENT. XVI. SECT. IN. PART II. counter. When the impartial inquirer confident the abominable calumnies that were lavished on the authors and instruments of the Reformation; when he restects upon the horrors of fire and sword employed, by bigoted and blood-thirsty tyrants, to extirpate and destroy those good men whom they wanted arguments to persuade and convince; will not his heart burn with a generous indignation? and will he not think it in some measure just, that such horrid proceedings should be represented in their proper colours, and be stigmatised by such expressions as are suited to their demerit?

Three periods must be distinguished in the history of the Lutheran church.

XX. In order to form a just idea of the internal state of the Lutheran church, and of the revolutions and changes that have happened in it, with their true springs and real causes, it is necessary to consider the history of that church under three distinct periods. The first extends from the commencement of the Reformation to the death of Luther, which happened in the year 1546: the second takes in the space of time which elapsed between the death of Luther and that of Melancthon, and consequently terminates in the year 1560; while the remainder of the century is comprehended in the third period.

The First Period.

During this period, all things were transacted in the Lutheran church in a manner conformable to the sentiments, counsels, and orders of Luther. This eminent reformer, whose undaunted resolution, and amazing credit and authority, rendered him equal to the most arduous attempts, easily suppressed the commotions and dissensions that arose from time to time in the church, and did not suffer the sects, that several had attempted to form in its boson, to gather pather strength, or to arrive at any considerable CENT. legree of consistence and maturity. The natural reassequence of this was, that, during the life of hat great man, the internal state of the Lutheran :hurch was a state of tolerable tranquillity and epose; and all such as attempted to soment diviions, or to introduce any essential changes, were ither spendily reduced to silence, or obliged to retire from the new community.

XXI. The infancy of this church was troubled Debates ceby an impetuous rabble of wrong-headed fanatics, tween Luwho introduced the utmost confusion wherever Fanatics in they endeavoured to diffuse their pestilential errors, the first and who pretended that they had received a divine inspiration, authorising them to erect a new kingdom of Christ, in which sin and corruption were to have no place. The leaders of this turbulent and riotous sect were Munzer, Storck, Stubner, and others, either Swiss, or Germans, who kindled the flame of discord and rebellion in several parts of Europe, and chiefly in Germany, and excited among the ignorant multitude tumults and commotions, which, though less violent in some places than in others, were, nevertheless, formidable wherever they appeared [d]. The history of this seditious band is full obscurity and confusion. A regular, full, and accurate account of it neither has, nor could well be, committed to writing; fince, on the one hand, the opinions and actions of these fanatics were a motley chaos of inconsistencies and contradictions, and, on the other, the age, in which they lived, produced few writers who had either the leisure or the capacity to observe with diligence, or to relate with accuracy, commotions and tumults of this extraordinary kind. however certain, that, from the most profligate and abandoned part of this enthuliastical multitade, those seditious armies were formed, which kindled in Germany the War of the Peasants, and afterwards seized the city of Munster, involving the whole province of Westphalia in the most dreadful calamities. It is also well known, that the better part of this motley tribe, terrified by the unhappy and deserved fate of their unworthy affociates, whom they saw extirpated and massacred with the most unrelenting severity, saved themselves from the ruin of their sect, and, at length, embraced the communion of those who are called Mennonites [e]. The zeal, vigilance, and resolution of Luther happily prevented the divisions, which the odious disciples of Munzer attempted to excite in the church he had founded, and preserved the giddy and credulous multitude from their seductions. And it may be fafely · affirmed, that, had it not been for the vigour and Fortitude of this active and undaunted reformer, the Lutheran church would, in its infancy, have fallen a miserable prey to the enthusiastic fury of these detestable fanatics [f].

[d] John Baptist Ottius, in his Annales Anahaptist. has collected a considerable number of facts relating to these fanatical commotions, which are also mentioned by all the writers of the history of the Reformation.

CENT. XVI. Bect. III. Part II

CarloBade.

XXII. Fanatics and enthusiasts of the kind now described, while they met with the warmest opposition from Luther, found, on the contrary, in [e] The tumults of the anabaptists in Germany have already been mentioned in a cursory manner, sect. i. chap. ii. sect. xxii. For an ample account of the origin, doctrine, and progress of the Mennonites, see the third chapter of the second part of this third section, cent. xvi.

in these tumults of the German anabaptists, was so much the greater on account of the inclination which Munzer and Storck discovered at first for the sentiments of Luther, and the sentertain with respect to these fanatics.

his

Chap. L. The History of the Lutheran Church.

s colleague, Carlostadt, such a credulous at- CENT. ention to their seductions, as naturally flattered XVI. them with the hopes of his patronage and favour. This divine, who was a native of Franconia, was not destitute of learning or of merit; but imprudence and precipitation were the distinguished lines of his warm and violent character. Of these he gave the most evident marks, in the year 1523, when, during the absence of Luther, he excited no small tumult at Wittenberg, by ordering the images to be taken out of the churches, and by other enterprise of a rash and dangerous nature [g]. This tumult was appealed by the sudden return of Luther, whose presence and exhortations calmed the troubled spirits of the people; and here we must look for the origin of the rupture between him and Carlostadt. For the latter immediately retired from Wittenberg to Orlamund, where he not only opposed the sentiments of [g] The reader may perhaps imagine, from Dr. Mosheim's account of this matter, that Carlostadt introduced these changes merely by his own authority; but this was far from being the case: the suppression of private masses, the removal of images out of the churches, the abolition of the law which imposed celibacy upon the cleary, which are the changes hinted at by our historian as rash and persons, were 'effected by Carlostadt, in conjunction with Boomhagius, "Melancthon, Jonas Amidorff, and others, and confirmed the authority of the elector of Saxony: so that there is some reason to apprehend that one of the principal causes of Luther's displeasure at these changes, was their being introduced in his ablence; unless we suppose that he had not so far shaken off the setters of the fetters of the fetters of the fetters of the setters of the set the absurdity and of the permicious consequences of the use of images, &c. As to the abolition of the law that imposed celibacy on the clergy, it is well known that it was the object of his warmest approbation. This appears from the following expressions in his letter to Amsdorff: " Carolostadii nuptize mire placent: novi puellam: comfortet eum Dominus in bonum exemplum inhibenda et minuenda papistica libidinis." He foon afterwards confirmed this approbation by his own example.

Luther

300

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. Luther concerning the eucharist [b], but also discovered, in several instances, a fanatical turn of mind [i]. He was therefore commanded to leave the territories of the elector of Saxony, which he did accordingly, and repaired to Switzerland, where he propagated his doctrines, and taught with success, first at Zurich, and afterwards at Basil, retaining however, as long as he lived, a favourable disposition towards the sect of the Anabaptists, and, in [b] This difference of opinion between Carloftadt and Luther concerning the eucharist, was the true conse of the violent rupture between those two eminent men, and it was very little to the honour of the latter. For, however the explication, which the former gave of the words of the institution of the Lord's Supper, may appear forced, yet the sentiments he entertained of that ordinance as a commemoration of Christ's death, and not as a celebration of his bodily presence, in consequence of a consubstantiation with the bread and wine, are infinitely more rational than the doctrine of Luther, which is loaded with some of the most palpable absurdities of transubstantiation. And if it be supposed that Carlostadt strained the rule of interpretation too far, when he alleged, that Christ pronounced the pronoun this (in the words, This is my body) pointing to his body, and not to the bread, what shall we think of Luther's explaining the nonlensical doctrine of consubstantiation by the similitude of a red-hot iron, in which two elements are united, as the body of Christ is with the bread in the eucharist?

Carlostadt.—Though he did not adopt the impious and abominable doctrines of Munzer and his band (as Dr. Moshim permits the uninstructed reader to imagine by mentioning him, as being a friend to these fanatics is general), yet he certainly was chargeable with some extravagancies that were observable in the tenets of that wattig-headed tribe. He was for abolishing the civil law, with the municipal laws and constitutions of the German empire, and proposed substituting the law of Moses in their place. He distinguished himself by railing at the universities, declaiming against human learning, and other follies.

Great wits to madness nearly are allied."
See Val. Ern. Loscheri Historia Motuum inter Lutheranes et Reformat. part I. cap. i.—Dan. Gerdes, Vita Carolostadii, in Miscell. Groningens. novis, tom, i.

detetaj*

general, to all enthusiastic teachers, who pretended to a divine inspiration [k]. Thus then did Luther, in a short space of time, allay this new storm which the precipitation of Carlostadt had raised in the church.

CENT. PART II.

XXIII. The reforming spirit of Carlostadt, Schwenckwith respect to the doctrine of Christ's presence seld. in the eucharist, was not extinguished by his exile, in the Lutheran church. It was revived, on the contrary, by a man nearly of the same turn of mind, a Silesian knight, and counsellor to the duke Lignitz, whose name was Caspar Schwenckfeld. This nobleman, seconded by Valentine Crautwald, man of eminent a [k] This affirmation of Dr. Mosheim wants much to be modified. In the original it stands thus: " Dum vixit vero anabaptistarum hominumque divina visa jactantium partibus amicum sese ostendit,"—i. e. as long as he lived, he shewed himself a friend to the anabaptists, and other enthusiasts who pretended to divine inspiration. But how could our historian affert this without restriction, since it is well known that Carlostadt, after his banishment from Saxony, composed a treatile against enthusiasm in general, and against the extravagant tenets and the violent proceedings of the anabaptists in particular? This treatife was even addressed to Luther, who was so affected by it, that, repenting of the unworthy treatment he had given to Carlostadt, he pleaded his cause, and obtained from the elector a permission for him to return into Saxony. See Gerdes, Vita Caroloftadii, in Miscell. Grodingenf. After this reconciliation with Luther, he composed a treatise on the eucharist, which breathes the most amiable spirit of moderation and humility; and, having perused the writings of Zuingle, where he saw his own sentiments on that subject maintained with the greatest perspicuity and force of evidence, he repaired a fecond time to Zurich, and thence to Basil, where he was admitted to the offices of paster and professor of divinity, and where, after having lived in the exemplary and constant practice of every Christian virtue, he died, amidst the warmest effusions of piety and resignation, on the 25th of December, 1541. All this is testified solemnly in a letter of the learned and pious Grynzus of Bafil, to Pitiscus, chaplain to the elector Palatine, and shews how little credit ought to be given to the affertions of the ignorant Moreri, or to the infinuations of the infidious Boffuet.

learning,

CENT. XVI. SECT. 111. PART H. learning, who lived at the court of the prince now mentioned, took notice of many things, which he looked upon as erroneous and defective, in the opinions and rites established by Luther; and, had not the latter been extremely vigilant, as well as vigorously supported by his friends and adherents, would have undoubtedly brought about a considerable schism in the church. Every circumstance, in Schwenckfeld's conduct and appearance, was adapted to give him credit and influence, His morals were pure, and his life, in all respects, exemplary. His exhortations in favour of true and folid piety were warm and persuasive, and his principal zeal was employed in promoting it among the people. He thus acquired the esteem and friendship of many learned and pious men, both in the Lutheran and Helvetic churches, who favoured his fentiments, and undertook to defend him against all his adversaries [1]. Notwithstanding all this, he was banished by his sovereign both from the court and from his country, in the year 1528, only because Zuingle had approved his opinions concerning the eucharist, and declared that they did not differ essentially from his own. From that time the persecuted knight wandered from place to place, under various turns of fortune, until death put an end to his trials in the year 1561 [m]. He had founded, in Silesia, a small congregation, the members

[1] See Jo. Conr. Fuellini Centuria I. Epiflolar. à Reformatoribus Helveticis scriptar. p. 169. 175. 225. Museum Helvetic. tom. iv. p. 445.

[m] Jo. Wigandi Schwenckfeldianismus, Lips. 1586. in 4to.—Conr. Schlusselburgi Catalog. Hereticor. lib. x. published at Francsort in the year 1599, in 8vo.—The most accurate accounts of this nobleman have been given by Chr. Aug. Salig, in his Histor. August. Confessionis, tom. iii. lib. xi. p. 951. and by Gottsried Arnold, in a German work, entitled, Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, p. 720. both which authors have pleaded the cause of Schwenckfeld.

f which were persecuted and ejected in our times' CENT. y the popula possessor of that country; but they xvi. lave been restored to their former habitations and rivileges, civil and religious, since the year 1742, by the present king of Prussa [n].

XXIV. The upright intentions of Schwenck-The doe-eld, and his zeal for the advancement of true Schwenckniety, deserve, no doubt, the highest commenda-iseld. ion; but the same thing cannot be said of his prudence and judgment. The good man had a natural propensity towards fanaticism, and fondly magined that he had received a divine commission o propagate his opinions. He differed from Luther, and the other friends of the reformation, in three points, which it is proper to felect from others of less consequence. The first of these points related to the doctrine concerning the eucharist. Schwenckfeld inverted the words of Christ, This is my body, and insisted on their being thus understood: "My body is this, i. e. "fuch as this bread which is broken and "confumed; a true and real food, which nou-"rishes, satisfies, and delights the soul. My "blood is this, that is, fuch in its effects as " the wine, which strengthens and refreshes the "heart." The poor man imagined that this wonderful doctrine had been revealed to him from heaven; which circumstance alone is a sufficient demonstration of his folly.

The second point in which he differed from Luther, was in his hypothesis relating to the efficacy of the divine word. He denied, for example, that the external word, which is committed to. writing in the Holy Scriptures, was endowed with the power of bealing, illuminating, and renewing the mind; and he ascribed this power to

[n] See an account of Schwenckfeld's Confession of Faith, in Kocher's Bibliotheca Theologia Symbolica, p. 457.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PARTII. the internal word, which according to his notion, was Christ himself. His discourses, however, concerning this internal word, were, as usually happens to persons of his turn, so full of confusion, obscurity, and contradiction, that it was difficult to find out what his doctrine really was, and whether it resembled that of the Mystics and Quakers, or was borrowed from a different source.

His doctrine concerning the buman nature of Christ, formed the third subject of debate between him and the Lutherans. He would not allow Christ's human nature, in its exalted state, to be called a creature, or a created substance, as such denomination appeared to him infinitely below its majestic dignity, united as it is, in that glorious state, with the divine essence. This notion of Schwenckfeld bears a remarkable affinity to the doctrine of Eutyches, which, however, he professed to reject; and, in his turn, he accused those of Nestorianism, who gave the denomination of a creature to the human nature of Christ.

The Anti-

XXV. An intemperate zeal, by straining certain truths too far, turns them into falsehood, or, at least, often renders them the occasion of the most pernicious abuses. A striking instance of this happened during the ministry of Luther. While he was insisting upon the necessity of imprinting deeply in the minds of the people that doctrine of the gospel, which represents Christ's merits as the fource of man's falvation, and while he was eagerly employed in censuring and refuting the popish doctors, who mixed the law and gospel together, and represented eternal happiness as the fruit of legal obedience, a fanatic arose, who abused his doctrine, by over-straining it, and thus opened a field for the most dangerous errors. This new teacher was John Agricola, a native of Eisleben, and an eminent doctor of the Lutheran church, though chargeable with vanity, pre-fumption and artifice. He first began to make a noise in the year 1538, when, from the doctrine of Luther now mentioned, he took occasion to declaim against the law, maintaining, that it was neither fit to be proposed to the people as a rule of manners, nor to be used in the church as a mean of instruction; and that the gospel alone was to be inculcated and explained, both in the churches and in the schools of learning. The followers of Agricola were called Antinomians, i. e. enemies of the law. But the fortitude, vigilance and credit of Luther suppressed this sect in its very infancy; and Agricola, intimidated by the opposition of such a respectable adversary, acknowleged and renounced his pernicious syftem. But this recantation does not feem to have been sincere; since it is said, that when his fears were dispelled by the death of Luther, he returned to his errors, and gained proselytes to his extravagant doctrine [0].

CENT

XVI,

XXVI. The tenets of the Antinomians, if their The docadversaries are to be believed, were of the most Agricola noxious nature and tendency; for they are sup- examined. posed to have taught the loosest and most dissolute doctrine in point of morals, and to have maintained that it was allowable to follow the impulse of every passion, and to transgress without reluctance the divine law, provided the transgreffor took hold of Christ, and embraced his merits by a lively faith. Such, at least, is the representation that is generally given of their doctrine; but it ought not to be received with implicit credulity. For whoever looks into this

[o] See Caspar Sagittarius, Introd. ad Histor. Ecclesias. tom. i. p. 838.—Bayle's Dictionaire, tome ii. at the article Islebius.—Conr. Schlusselburg, Catalog. Heret. lib. iv.—G. Arnold, Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, p. 813.

CENT. matter with attention and impartiality, will soon sect. m. be perfuaded, that fuch an absurd and impious doctrine is unjustly laid to the charge of Agricola, and that the principal fault of this presumptuous man lay in some harsh and inaccurate expressions, that were susceptible of dangerous and pernicious interpretations. By the term law, he understood the Ten Commandments, promulgated under the Mosaic dispenfation; and he confidered this law as enacted for the Jews, and not for Christians. He, at the same time, explained the term Gospel (which he considered as substituted in the place of the law) in its true and extensive sense, as comprehending not only the doctrine of the merits of Christ rendered salutary by faith, but also the sublime precepts of holiness and virtue, delivered by the divine Saviour, as rules of obedience. If, therefore, we follow the intention of Agricola, without interpreting, in a rigorous manner, the uncouth phrases and improper expressions he so frequently and so injudiciously employed, his doctrine will plainly amount to this: "That the Ten Commandments, published during "the ministry of Moses, were chiefly defigned "for the Jews, and on that account might be " lawfully neglected and laid aside by Christians: " and that it was sufficient to explain with " perspicuity, and to enforce with zeal, what "Christ and his apostles had taught in the "New Testament, both with respect to "means of grace and falvation, and the obliga-"tions of repentance and virtue." The greatest part of the doctors of this century are chargeable with a want of precision and consistency in expressing their ideas; hence their real sentiments have been misunderstood, and opinions have been imputed to them which they never entertained.

The Second Period.

XXVII. AFTER the death of Luther, which CENT. happened in the year 1546, Philip Melancthon XVI. was placed at the head of the Lutheran doctors. PART II. The merit, genius, and talents of this new chief Debates were, undoubtedly, great and illustrious; though that arose it must, at the same time, be confessed, that he second pewas inferior to Luther in many respects [p], riod of the and more especially in courage, firmness, and church.

personal authority. His natural temper was soft and flexible; his love of peace almost excessive, and his apprehensions of the displeasure and refentment of men in power were such as betrayed a pusillanimous spirit. He was ambitious of the esteem and friendship of all with whom he had any intercourse, and was absolutely incapable of employing the force of threatenings, or the restraints of fear, to suppress the efforts of religious faction, to keep within due bounds the irregular love of novelty and change, and to secure to the church the obedience of its members. It is also to be observed, that Melancthon's sentiments, on some points of moment, differed confiderably from those of Luther; and it may not be improper to point out the principal subjects on which they adopted different ways of thinking.

In the first place, Melancthon was of opinion, that, for the fake of peace and concord, many [p] It would certainly be very difficult to point out the many respects in which Dr. Mosheim affirms that Luther was superior to Melancthon. For if the single article of courage and firmnels of mind be excepted, I know no other respect in which Melancthon is not superior, or at least equal, to Luther. He was certainly his equal in piety and virtue, and much his superior in learning, judgment, meekness, and humanity.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III.

things might be connived at and tolerated in the church of Rome, which Luther confidered as absolutely insupportable. The former carried so far the spirit of toleration and indulgence, as to discover no reluctance against retaining the ancient form of ecclesiastical government, and submitting to the dominion of the Roman pontiff, on certain conditions, and in such a manner, as might be without prejudice to the obligation and authority of all those truths that are clearly revealed in the holy scriptures.

A fecond occasion of a diversity of sentiment, between these two great men, was surnished by the tenets which Luther maintained in opposition to the doctrines of the church of Rome. Such were his ideas concerning faith, as the only cause of falvation, concerning the necessity of good works to our final happiness, and man's natural incapacity of promoting his own conversion. In avoiding the corrupt notions which were embraced by the Roman catholic doctors on these important points of theology, Luther seemed, in the judgment of Melancthon, to lean too much towards the opposite extreme [q]. Hence the latter was inclined to think, that the sentiments and expressions of his colleague required to be somewhat mitigated, lest they should give a handle to dangerous abuses, and be perverted to the propagation of pernicious errors.

It may be observed, thirdly, that though Melancthon adopted the sentiments of Luther in relation

Justification by Faith to such an excessive length, as seemed, though perhaps contrary to his intention, to derogate not only from the necessity of good works, but even from their obligation and importance. He would not allow them to be considered either as the conditions or means of salvation, or even as a preparation for receiving it.

CENT.

relation to the eucharist [r], yet he did not confider the controversy with the divines of Switzer- sect. 111. land on that subject, as a matter of sufficient moment to occasion a breach of church communion and fraternal concord between the contending parties. He thought that this happy concord might be easily preserved by expressing the doctrine of the eucharist, and Christ's presence in that ordinance, in general and ambiguous terms, which the two churches might explain according to their respective systems.

Such were the fentiments of Melancthon, which, though he did not entirely conceal during the life of Luther, he delivered, nevertheless, with great circumspection and modesty, yielding always to the authority of his colleague, for whom he had a fincere friendship, and of whom also he stood in awe. But no fooner were the eyes of Luther closed, than he inculcated, with the greatest plainness and freedom, what he had before only hinted with timidity and caution.

[r] It is somewhat surprising to hear Dr. Mosheim affirming that Melancthon adopted the sentiments of Luther in relation to the eucharist, when the contrary is well known. It is true, that in the writings of Melancthon, which were published before the year 1529, or 1530, there are passages, which shew that he had not, as yet, thoroughly examined the controversy relating to the nature of Christ's presence in the eucharist. is also true, that during the disputes carried on between Westphal and Calvin, after the death of Luther, concerning the real presence, he did not declare himself in an open manner for either fide (which however is a presumptive proof of his leaning to that of Calvin), but expressed his sorrow at these divisions, and at the spirit of animosity by which they were inflamed. But whoever will be at the pains to read the letters of Melancthon to Calvin upon this subject, or those extracts of them that are collected by Hospinian, in the second volume of his Historia Sacramentaria, p. 428. will be persuaded that he looked upon the doctrine of Consubstantiation not only as erroneous, but even as idolatrous; and that nothing but the fear of inflaming the present divisions, and of not being seconded, prevented him from declaring his sentiments openly. See Bayle's Life of Melanca thon, note L, in his Dictionary.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. The eminent rank Melancthon held among the Lutheran doctors rendered this bold manner of proceeding extremely disagreeable to many. His doctrine accordingly was censured and opposed; and thus the church was deprived of the tranquillity it had enjoyed under Luther, and exhibited an unhappy scene of animosity, contention, and discord.

The adiaphoriftic
controverly, or the difpute concerning matters of an indifferent
sature,

XXVIII. The rife of these unhappy divisions must be dated from the year 1548, when Charles V. attempted to impose upon the Germans the famous edict, called the Interim. Maurice, the new elector of Saxony, desirous of knowing how far such an edict ought to be respected in his dominions, affembled the doctors of Wittenberg and Leipsic in the last-mentioned city and proposed this nice and critical subject to their ferious examination. Upon this occasion Melancthon, complying with the suggestions of that lenity and moderation that were the great and leading principles in the whole course of his conduct and actions, declared it as his opinion, that, in matters of an indifferent nature, compliance was due to the imperial edicts [s]. But in the class of matters indifferent, this great man and his affociates placed many things which had appeared of the highest importance to Luther, and could not, of consequence, be considered as indifferent by his true disciples [t]. For he regarded,

[s] The piece in which Melancthon and his affociates delivered their fentiments relating to things indifferent, is commonly called in the German language, das Leipziger Interim, and was republished at Leipsic in 1721, by Bieckius, in a work entitled, das dreyfache Interim.

[1] If they only are the true disciples of Luther, who submit to his judgment, and adopt his sentiments in theological matters, many doctors of that communion, and our historian among the rest, must certainly be supposed to have forseited that title, as will abundantly appear hereafter. Be that as it may, Melancthon can scarcely, if at all, be justified in placing as such, the doctrine of justification by faith alone, the necessity of good works to eternal salvation, the number of the sacraments, the jurisdiction claimed by the pope and the bishops, extreme unction, the obfervation of certain religious festivals, and several superstitious rites and ceremonies. Hence arose that violent scene of contention and discord, commonly called the Adiaphoriftic [u] controversy, which divided the church during many years, and proved highly detrimental to the progress of the Reformation. The defenders of the primitive doctrines of Lutheranism, with Flacius at their head, attacked with incredible bitterness and fury the doctors of Wittenberg and Leipsic (particularly Melancthon, by whose counsel and influence every thing relating to the Interim had been conducted), and accused them of apostasy from the true religion. Melancthon, on the other hand, seconded by the zeal of his friends and disciples, justified his conduct with the utmost spirit and vigour [w]. In this unfortunate debate the two following questions were principally discussed: First, whether the points that seemed indifferent to Melancthon were so in reality? This his adversaries obstinately denied [x]. Secondly, whether in things of an indifferent nature, and in which the interests of religion are not essen-

CENT, XVI. SICT. MI. PART II.

placing in the class of things indifferent the doctrines relating to faith and good works, which are the fundamental points of the Christian religion, and, if I may use such an expression, the very binges on which the gospel turns.

[u] This controversy was called Adiaphoristic, and Melancthon and his followers Adiaphorists, from the Greek word adiagogo;, which signifies indifferent.

[w] Schlusselburg's Catalog. Hereticor. lib. xiii.—Arnold's Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, lib. xvi. cap. xxvi. p.816.—Salig's Histor. Aug. Confess. vol. i. p. 611.— The German work, entitled, Unschuldige Nachrichten, A. 1702. p. 339. 393—Luc. Osiandri Epitome Histor. Eccles. Centur. xvi. p. 502.

[x] & See above, note [1].

·CENT. XVI. BBCT. III. tially concerned, it be lawful to yield to the enemies of the truth?

A controverfy fet on foot by George Major concerning the necessity of good works.

XXIX. This debate concerning things indifferent became, as might well have been expected, a fruitful fource of other controversies, which were equally detrimental to the tranquillity of the church, and to the cause of the Reformation. which it gave rife was the warm dispute concerning the necessity of good works, that was carried on with fuch spirit against the rigid Lutherans, by George Major, an eminent teacher of theology at Wittenberg. Melancthon had long been of opinion, that the necessity of good works, in order to the attainment of everlasting salvation, might be afferted and taught, as conformable to the truths revealed in the gospel; and both he and his colleagues declared this to be their opinion, when they were affembled at Leipsic, in the year 1548, to examine the famous edict already mentioned [y]. This declaration was severely censured by the rigid disciples of Luther, as contrary to the doctrine and sentiments of their chief, and as conformable both to the tenets and interests of the church of Rome; but it found an able defender in Major, who, in the year 1552, maintained the necessity of good works, against the extravagant affertions of Amsdorf. Hence arose a new controversy between the rigid and moderate Lutherans, which was carried on with the keenness and animosity that were peculiar to all debates of a religious nature during this century. In the course of this warm debate, Amsdorf was so far transported and infatuated by his excessive zeal for the doctrine of Luther, as to maintain, that good works were an impediment to falvation; from which imprudent and odious expression the slame of controversy received new fuel, and broke forth with redoubled fury. CENT. On the other hand, Major complained of the sect. 111. malice or ignorance of his adversaries, who ex- *** "... plained his doctrine in a manner quite different from that in which he intended it should be understood; and, at length, he renounced it entirely, that he might not appear fond of wrangling, or be looked upon as a disturber of the peace of the church. This step did not, however, put an end to the debate, which was still carried on, until it was terminated at last by the Form of Concord [z].

XXX. From the same source that produced the The sperdispute concerning the necessity of good works, gistical conarose the synergistical controversy. The Synergifts [a], whose doctrine was almost the same with that of the Semi-Pelagians, denied that God was the only agent in the conversion of sinful man; and affirmed, that man co-operated with divine grace in the accomplishment of this falutary purpose. Here also Melancthon renounced the doctrine of Luther; at least, the terms he employs in expressing his sentiments concerning this intricate subject, are fuch as Luther would have rejected with horror; for, in the conference at Leipsic already mentioned, the former of these great men did not scruple to affirm, that "God drew to himself and converted adult persons in such a manner, that the powerful impression of his grace was accompanied with a certain correspondent action of their will." The friends and disciples of Melancthon adopted this manner of speaking, and used the expressions of their master to describe the nature of the divine agency in man's conversion. But this representation of the matter was far from being agreeable to the rigid Lutherans. They looked upon it as subversive of the true and genuine doctrine of Luther, relating to the absolute servitude of the human will [b], and the total inability of man to do any good action, or to bear any part in his own conversion; and hence they opposed the Synergists, or Semi-Pelagians, with the utmost animosity and bitterness. The principal champions in this theological conflict were Strigelius, who defended the sentiments of Melancthon with singular dexterity and perspicuity, and Flacius, who maintained the ancient doctrine of Luther: of these doctors, as also the subject of their debate, a farther account will foon be given [c].

[z] Schlusselburg, lib. vii. Catal. Hereticor.—G. Arnold's Kirchen Hift. lib. xvi. cap. xxvii. p. 822. - Jo. Musai Prelection in Form. Concord. p. 181. - Arn. Grevii Memoria Joh, Westphali, p. 166.

[a] As this controverly turned upon the co-operation of the human will with the divine grace, the persons who maintained this joint agency, were called Synergifts, from a Greek word (oureque), which signifies co-operation.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

Flacius, hy
his intemperate zeal, excites many divisions in the church.

XXXI. During these dissensions, a new university was founded at Jena by the dukes of Saxe-Weinar, the sons of the famous John Frederic, whose unsuccessful wars with the emperor Charles V. had involved him in so many calamities, and deprived him of his electoral dominions. The noble founders of this university, having designed it for the bulwark of the protestant religion, as it was taught and inculcated by Luther, were particularly careful in choosing such professors and divines as were remarkable for their attachment to the genuine doctrine of that great resormer, and

their

[b] The doctrines of absolute predestination, irresistible grace, and human impotence, were never carried to a more excessive length, nor maintained with a more virulent obstinacy, by any divine, than they were by Luther. But in these times he has very sew sollowers in this respect, even among those who bear his name.

[c] See Schlusselburg's Catal. Hereticor. lib. v. G. Arnold, Histor. Eccles. lib. xvi. cap. xxviii. p.826.—Bayle's Distinuire, at the article Synergistes.—Salig's Histor. August. Confess. vol. iii. p. 474. 587. 880.—Musai Pralest. in Formulam Concordia, p. 88.

their aversion to the sentiments of those moderate Lutherans, who had attempted, by certain modifications and corrections, to render it less harsh and difgusting. And as none of the Lutheran doctors were so eminent, on account of their uncharitable and intemperate zeal for this ancient doctrine, as Matthias Flacius, the virulent enemy of Melancthon and all the Philippists, he was appointed, in the year 1557, professor of divinity at Jena. The consequences of this nomination were, indeed, deplorable. For this turbulent and impetuous man, whom nature had formed with an uncommon propensity to foment divisions and propagate discord, not only revived all the ancient controversies that had distracted the church, but also excited new debates; and fowed, with fuch avidity and fuccess, the feeds of contention between the divines of Weimar and those of the electorate of Saxony, that a fatal schism in the Lutheran church was apprehended by many of its wifest members [d]. And indeed this schism would have been inevitable, if the machinations and intrigues of Flacius had produced the desired essect. For, in the year 1559, he per-fuaded the dukes of Saxe-Weimar to order a refutation of the errors that had crept into the Lutheran church, and particularly of those that were imputed to the followers of Melancthon, to be drawn up with care, promulgated by authority, and placed among the other religious edicts and articles of faith that were in force in their dominions. But this pernicious design of dividing the church proved abortive; for the other Lutheran princes, who acted from the true and genuine principles of

CENT. XVI. SECT. IIL PART II.

[d] See the remarkable letter of Augustus, elector of Saxony, concerning Flacius and his malignant attempts; published by Arn. Grevius in his Memoria Job. Westphali, p. 393.

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART II.

The contest hetween Flacing and Strigelius. the Reformation, disapproved this seditious book, from a just apprehension of its tendency to increase the present troubles, and to augment, instead of diminishing, the calamities of the church [e].

XXXII. This theological incendiary kindled the flame of discord and persecution even in the church of Saxe-Weimar, and in the university of Jena, to which he belonged, by venting his fury against Strigelius [f], the friend and disciple of Melancthon. This moderate divine adopted, in many things, the sentiments of his master, and maintained, particularly, in his public lectures, that the buman will, when under the influence of the divine grace leading it to repentance, was not totally inactive, but bore a certain part in the falutary work of its conversion. In consequence of this doctrine, he was accused by Flacius of Synergism at the court of Saxe-Weimar; and, by the duke's order, was cast into prison, where he was treated with severity and rigour. He was at length delivered from this confinement in the year 1562, and allowed to resume his former vocation, in consequence of a declaration of his real fentiments, which, as he alleged, had been greatly misrepresented. This declaration, however, did not either decide or terminate the controversy; fince Strigelius seemed rather to conceal his erroneous fentiments [g] under ambiguous expressions, than to renounce them entirely. And indeed he was fo conscious of this himself, that to avoid being involved in new calamities and perfecutions, he retired from reason to believe, very erroneous in the judgment of Dr. Mosheim, nor are they such in the estimation of the greatest part of the Lutheran doctors at this day.

[e] Salig, Historia August. Confess. vol. iii. p. 476.

[f] See Bayle's Didionary, at the article Strigelius.

Jena to Leipsic, and from Leipsic to Heidelberg, where he spent the remainder of his days; and appeared so unsettled in his religious opinions, that it is really doubtful whether he is to be placed among the followers of Luther or Calvin.

CENT.

XXXIII. The issue of this warm controversy, Some partiwhich Flacius had kindled with fuch an intemperate cular of the zeal, proved highly detrimental to his own re- ned on by putation and influence in particular, as well as to State-the interests of the Lutheran church in general. Weisser. For while this vehement disputant was assailing his adversary with an inconsiderate ardour, he exaggerated so excessively the sentiments, which he looked upon as orthodox, as to maintain an opinion of the most monstrous and detestable kind; an opinion which made him appear, even in the judgment of his warmest friends, an odious heretic, and a corruptor of the true religion. In the year 1560, a public dispute was holden at Weimar, between him and Strigelius, concerning the natural powers and faculties of the human mind, and their influence in the conversion and conduct of the true Christian. In this conference the latter seemed to attribute to unaffifted nature too much, and the former too little. The one looked upon the fall of man as an event that extinguished, in the human mind, every virtuous tendency, every noble faculty, and left nothing behind it but universal darkness and corruption. The other maintained, that this degradation of the powers of nature was by no means universal or entire; that the will retained still some propensity to worthy pursuits, and a certain degree of activity that rendered it capable of attainments in virtue. Strigelius, who was well acquainted with the wiles of a captious philosophy, proposed to defeat his adversary by puzzling him, and, with that view, addressed to him the following question. "Whether original sin, or the corrupt dispute car-

habit

CENT. XVI.

habit which the human foul contracted by the fall, is to be placed in the class of substances or accidents? Flacius answered with unparalleled imprudence and temerity, that it belonged to the former; and maintained, to his dying hour, this most extravagant and dangerous proposition, that original fin is the very substance of human nature. So invincible was the obstinacy with which he persevered in this strange doctrine, that he chose to renounce all worldly honours and advantages rather than depart from it. It was condemned by the greatest and foundest part of the Lutheran church, as a doctrine that bore no small affinity to that of the Manichæans. But, on the other hand, the merit, erudition, and credit of Flacius procured him many respectable patrons and able defenders among the most learned doctors of the church, who embraced his fentiments, and maintained his cause with the greatest spirit and zeal; of whom the most eminent were Cyriac Spangenberg, Christopher Irenaus, and Cælestine  $\lceil b \rceil$ .

The confequences that arose from the impruutilize of Fracius.

XXXIV. It is scarcely possible to imagine how much the Lutheran church suffered from this new dispute in all those places where its contagion had reached, and how detrimental it was to the progress of Lutheranism, among those who still adhered to the religion of Rome. For the slame of discord spread to a great extent; it was communicated even to those churches which were erected in popish [b] Schlusselburg. Catalog. Hereticor. lib. ii.—The Life of Flacius, written in German by Ritter, and published in 8vo. at Francfort, in the year 1725.—Salig, Histor. Aug. Confessionis, vol. iii. p. 593.—Arnold's Kirchen Hist. lib. xvi. cap. xxix. p. 829.—Musai Prelett. in Formul. Concordia, p. 29.—Jo. Georgii Leuckseldii Historia Spangenbergensis.—For a particular account of the dispute, that was holden publicly at Weimar, see the German work, entitled, Unschulde Nachricht. p. 383.

CENT.

the gloomy shade of a dubious toleration; so animated the Lutheran pastors, though unded by their cruel adversaries, that they neither be restrained by the dictates of pruncither be restrained by the dictates of pruncing, nor by the sense of danger [i]. Many are nion, that an ignorance of philosophical distants and definitions threw Flacius inconsiderated the extravagant hypothesis he maintained uch obstinacy, and that his greatest heresy was ore than a foolish attachment to an unusual

But Flacius feems to have fully refuted this n his behalf, by declaring boldly, in feveral of his writings, that he knew perfectly well illosophical fignification and the whole energy word fubstance, and was by no means ignoof the consequences that might be drawn the doctrine he had embraced [k]. Be that may, we cannot but wonder at the sensels accessive obstinacy of this turbulent man, who rather to sacrifice his fortune, and disturb ranquillity of the church, than to abandon a, which was entirely foreign to the subject in te, and renounce an hypothesis, that was comfort the most palpable contradictions.

See a German work of Bern. Raupach, entitled, ache Zugabe zu dem Evangelisch. Oesterrich. p. 25. 29.

The same author speaks of the friends of Flacius in a; and particularly of Irenzus, in his Presbyterol. ac. p. 69.—For an account of Czelestine, see the German mentioned at the end of the preceding note.

This will appear evident to such as will be at the pains solut the letters which Westphal wrote to his friend Flain order to persuade him to abstain from the use of the substance, with the answers of the latter. These Letters inswers were published by Arnold Grevius, in his Me-Jo. Westphali, p. 186.

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. III.
PART II.
The disputes kindled by Offender.

XXXV. The last controversy that we shall mention, of those that were occasioned by the excessive lenity of Melancthon, was set on foot by Osiander, in the year 1549, and produced much discord and animosity in the church. Had its founder been yet alive, his influence and authority would have suppressed in their birth these wretched disputes; nor would Osiander, who despised the moderation of Melancthon, have dared either to publish or defend his crude and chimerical opinions within the reach of Luther. Arrogance and fingularity were the principal lines in Ofiander's character; he loved to strike out new notions; but his views seemed always involved in an intricate obscurity. The difputes that arose concerning the Interim, induced him to retire from Nuremberg, where he had exercifed the pastoral charge, to Koning sberg, where he was chosen professor of divinity. In this new station he began his academical functions by propagating notions concerning the Divine Image, and the nature of Repentance, very different from the doctrine that Luther had taught on these interesting subjects; and, not content with this deviation from the common track, he thought proper, in the year 1550, to introduce confiderable alterations and corrections into the doctrine that had been generally received in the Lutheran church, with respect to the means of our justification before God. When we examine his discussion of this important point, we shall find it much more easy to perceive the opinions he rejected, than to understand the system he had invented or adopted; for, as was too usual in this age, he not only expressed his notions in an obscure manner, but seemed very frequently to speak and write in contradiction to himself. His doctrine, ever, when carefully examined, will appear to amount to the following propositions; "Christ, considered in his buman nature only, could not,

by his obedience to the divine law, obtain justification and pardon for sinners; nor can we be justified before God by embracing and applying to ourselves, through faith, the righteousness and obedience of the man Christ. It is only through that eternal and effential righteousness, which dwells in Christ considered as God, and which resides in his divine nature, that is united to the human, that mankind can obtain complete justification. Man becomes a partaker of this divine righteousness by faith, fince it is in consequence of this uniting principle that Christ dwells in the heart of man, with his divine righteousness; now, wherever this divine righteousness dwells, there God can behold no sin, and therefore, when it is can behold no sin, and therefore, when it is present with Christ in the hearts of the regaserate, they are, on its account, confidered by the Deity as righteous, although they be sinners.

Moreover, this divine and justifying righteousness of Christ, excites the faithful to the pursuit of 66 holiness, and to the practice of virtue." This doctrine was zealously opposed by the most emi-neat doctors of the Lutheran church, and, in a more especial manner, by Melancthon and his colleagues. On the other hand, Osiander and his sentiments were supported by persons of confiderable weight. But, upon the death of this rigid and fanciful divine, the flame of controverfy was cooled, and dwindled by degrees into nothing [/].

XXXVI. The

[1] See Schlusselburgii Catalogus Hareticor. lib. vi.-Arnoldi Kirchen Hill. lib. xvi. cap. xxiv. p. 804.-Chrift. Hartknoch's Preufhiche Kirchen Historie, p. 309 .- Salig's Historia August. Confessionis, tom. ii. p. 922. The judgment that was formed of this controversy by the divines of Wittenberg, may be seen in the German work entitled, Unsebuldige Nachrichten. TOL. IT.

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. III.
PART II.
The deletes excited by Stancares.

XXXVI. The doctrine of Offiander, concerning the method of being justified before God, appeared fo abfurd to Stancarus, professor of Hebrew at Konigsberg, that he undertook to refute But while this turbulent and impetuous doctor was exerting all the vehemence of his zeel against the opinion of his colleague, he was hurried by his violence into the opposite extreme, and fell into an hypothesis, that appeared equally groundless, and not less dangerous in its tendency and confequences. Ofiander had maintained that the man Christ, in his character of moral agent, was obliged to obey, for bimfelf, the divine law, and therefore could not, by the imputation of this obedience, obtain righteoufness or justification for others. Hence he concluded. that the Saviour of the world had been empowered, not by his character as man, but by his nature as God, to make expiation for our fins, and reconcile us to the favour of an offended Deity. Stancarus, on the other hand, excluded entirely Christ's divine nature from all concern in the fatisfaction he made, and in the redemption he procured for offending mortals, and maintained, that the facred office of a mediator between God and man belonged to Jefus, confidered in his human nature alone. Having perceived, however, that this doctrine exposed him to the enmity of many divines, and even rendered him the object of popular refentment and indignation, he retired from Konigsberg into Germany, and at length into Nachrichten, p. 141. and that of the doctors of Copenhagen, is der Dänischen Bibliothee. part vii. p. 150, where may be found as ample lift of the writings published on this subject.—To some just idea of the insolence and arrogance of Osiander, those was understand the German language will do well to consult Histories, Nuremberg Interime-Historie, p. 150.

Poland, where, after having excited no finall com- CENT. motions [m], he concluded his days in the year 1574 [7].

XXXVII. All those who had the cause of 🖰 virtue, and the advancement of the Reformation that were really at heart, looked with an impatient ardour employed to for an end to these bitter and uncharitable con- divisions. tentions; and their defires of peace and concord in the church were still increased, by their perceiving the great affiduity with which Rome turned thefe unhappy divisions to the advancement of her interests. But during the life of Melancthon, who was principally concerned in these warm debates, no effectual method could be found to bring them to a conclusion. The death of this great man, which happened in the year 1560, changed, indeed, the face of things, and enabled those who were disposed to terminate the prefent contests, to act with more resolution, and a furer prospect of success than had ac-

The methods

[m] See a German work of Chr. Hartknoch, entitled, Preufffebe Kirchen geschiebte, p. 340.—Schlusselburgii Catalog. Hareticor. lib. ix. - Dictionaire de Bayle, at the article Stancarus. -Before the arrival of Stancarus at Konigsberg, in the year 2548, he had lived for some time in Switzerland, where also he had occasioned religious disputes; for he adopted several docrines of Luther, particularly that concerning the virtue and efficacy of the facraments, which were rejected by the Swifs and Grisons. See the Museum Helveticum, tom. v. p. 484. 490. For an account of the disturbances he occasioned in Poland, in 1556, fee Bullinger, in Jo. Conr. Fuestini Genturia I. Epifolarum à Reformator. Helvetic. scriptarum, p. 371. 459.

[ a] The main argument alleged by Stancarus, in favour of his hypothesis, was this, that, if Christ was mediator by his divine nature only, it followed evidently, that even confidered cas God he was inferior to the Father; and thus, according to him, the doctrine of his adversary Otiander led directly the Unitarian fystem. This difficulty, which was presented with great fubtilty, engaged many to fleike into a middle road, ed to maintain, that both the divine and human natures of should were immediately concerned in the work of redemption.

companied

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. companied their former efforts. Hence it was, that, after several vain attempts, Augustus, elector of Saxony, and John William, duke of Saxe-Weimar, summoned the most eminent doctors of both the contending parties to meet at Altenburg, in the year 1568, and there to propose, in an amicable manner, and with a charitable spirit, their respective opinions, that thus it might be seen how far a reconciliation was possible, and what was the most probable method of bringing it about. But the intemperate zeal and warmth of the disputants, with other inauspicious circumstances, blasted the fruits that were expected from this Conference [o]. Another method of restoring tranquility and union among the members of the Lutheran church was therefore proposed; and this was, that a certain number of wise and mo-derate divines should be employed in composing a Form of doctrine, in which all the controversies that divided the church should be terminated and decided; and that this new compilation, as foon as it should be approved by the Lutheran princes and confistories, should be clothed with ecclesiastical authority, and added to the symbolical [p] or standard books of the Lutheran church. James Andreas, professor at Tubingen, whose theological abilities had procured him the most eminent and shining reputation, had been employed so early as the year 1569, in this critical and difficult undertaking, by the special command of the dukes of Wirtemberg and Brunswick. The elector of Saxony [q], with several persons of distinction, embarked with these two princes in the project

[o] Casp. Sagittarii Introductio ad Hist. Ecclesiasticas, part II. p. 1542.

[q] Augustus.

The Lutherans eall symbolical (from a Greek word that figuifics collection, or compilation), the books which contain their articles of faith and rules of discipline.

they had formed; so that Andreas, under the CENT. shade of such a powerful protection and patron- XVI. age, exerted all his zeal, traveled through different parts of Germany, negotiated alternately with courts and fynods, and took all the measures which prudence could suggest, to render the Form, that he was compoling, universally acceptable.

XXXVIII. The persons embarked in this con- The Surem ciliatory design, were persuaded that no time Cappeo-ought to be lost in carrying it into execution, or secret fawhen they perceived the imprudence and teme- vourers of rity of the disciples of Melancthon, and the changes they were attempting to introduce into the doctrine of the church. For his fon-in-law, Peucer [r], who was a physician and professor of natural philosophy at Wittenberg, together with the divines of that city and of Leipfic, encouraged by the approbation, and relying on the credit, of Cracovius, chancellor of Dresden, and of several ecclesiastics and persons of distinction at the Saxon court, aimed at nothing less than abolishing the doctrine of Luther, concerning the eucharist and the person of Christ, with a view of substituting the fentiments of Calvin in its place. This new

[r] This Peucer, whom Dr. Mosheim mentions without any mark of distinction, was one of the wisest, most amiable, and most learned men that adorned the annals of German literature during this century, as the well-known history of his life, and the confiderable number of his medical, mathematical, moral, and theological writings, abundantly testify. Nor was he more remarkable for his merit than for his sufferings. After his genius and virtues had rendered him the favourite of the elector of Saxony, and placed him at the head of the university of Wittenberg, he felt, in a terrible manner, the effects of the bigotry and barbarity of the rigid Lutherans, who, on account of his denying the corporal presence of Christ in the eucharist, united, with success, their efforts to deprive him of the favour of his fovereign, and procured his imprisonment. His confinement, which lasted ten years, was accompanied with inhuman severity. See Melchior Adam's Vit. Medicor. Germanor.

reformation

SECT. M. FAST IL

CRNT. reformation was attempted in Savary in the year 1570; and a great variety of clandeline arts and stratagems were employed, in order to bring it to a happy and fuccessful iffue. What the femiments of Melanchhon concerning the encharift were towards the conclusion of his days, appears so be extremely doubtful. It is however certain, that he had a throng inclination to form a coalition between the Sexons and Calvinists, though he was prevented, by the irrefolution and timidity of his natural character, from attempting openly this much-defired union. Peucer, and the other disciples of Melancihon already memtioned, made a public profession of the doctrine of Calvin: and though they had much more spirit and courage than their soft and yielding master, yet they wanted his circumspection and prudence, which were not less necessary to the accomplishment of their defigns. Accordingly, in the year 1571, they published, in the German language, a work entitled Stereoma [s], and other writings, in which they openly declared their dissent from the doctrine of Luther concerning the eucharist and the Person of Christ [t]; and that

( [s] A term which fignifies foundation.

[1] The learned historian seems to deviate here from his usual accuracy. The authors of the book intitled Stereous, did not declare their dissent from the doctrine of Luther, but from the extravagant inventions of some of his successors. This great man, in his controversy with Zuingle, had indeed thrown out some unguarded expressions, that seemed to imply a belief of the omnipresence of the body of Christ: but he became senfible afterwards that this opinion was attended with great difficulties, and particularly, that it ought not to be brought forward as a proof of Christ's corporal presence in the eucharist *. Yet this ahsurd hypothesis was renewed after the death of Luther, by Tinman and Westphal, and was dressed up in a still more

Ipecious

• Sec Lutheri op. tom. viii. p. 375. Edit. Janiens.

nat they might execute their purposes with reater facility, they introduced into the schools a atechism, compiled by Pezelius, which was faourable to the sentiments of Calvin. As this old step excited great commotions and debates the church, Augustus held at Dresden, in the me year, a solemn convocation of the Saxon ivines, and of other persons concerned in the Iministration of ecclesiastical affairs, and comanded them to adopt bis opinion in relation to we eucharist [u]. The assembled doctors com-

CENT.

ecious and plausible form, by Brentius, Chemnitz, and Aneas, who maintained the communication of the properties of brist's divinity to bis buman nature, as it was afterwards opted by the Lutheran church. This strange system gave casion to the book intitled Stereoma, in which the doctrine Luther was respected, and the inventions alone of his suc-Fors were renounced, and in which the authors declared plainthat they did not adopt the fentiments of Zuingle or Calvin, t that they admitted the real and substantial presence of rift's body and blood in the eucharift.

[u] In this passage, compared with what sollows, Dr. osheim seems to maintain, that the opinion of Augustus, ich he imposed upon the affembled divines, was in favour of : adversaries of Melanchon, and in direct opposition to the But here he has committed a palpahors of the Stereoma. overlight. The convocation of Dresden, in the year 1571, :ead of approving or maintaining the doctrine of the rigid therans, drew up, on the contrary, a form of agreement (forla consensus) in which the omnipresence, or ubiquity of rift's body, was denied; and which was, indeed, an abridgnt of the book entitled Stereoma: so that the transactions Dresden were entirely savourable to the moderate Lutherans, o embraced openly and fincerely (and not by a feigned cont (subdole) as our historian remarks) the sentiment of the for Augustus, who at that time patronized the disciples of lancthon. This prince, it is true, seduced by the crafty and ful infinuations of the Ubiquitarians, or rigid Lutherans, who de him believe that the ancient doctrines of the church were langer, changed sides soon after, and was pushed on to the st violent and persecuting measures, of which the convocaa of Torgaw was the first step, and the Ferm of Concord unhappy iffue.

CBNT. XVI. SECT. HI. DART II. plied with this order in appearance; but their compliance was feigned [w]; for, on their return to the places of their abode, they resumed their original design, pursued it with assiduity and zeal, and by their writings, as also by their public and private instructions, endeavoured to abolish the ancient doctrine of the Saxons, relating to the presence of Christ's body in that holy sacrament. The elector, informed of these proceedings, convened anew the Saxon doctors, and held, in the year 1574, the famous convocation of Torgaw [x], where, after a strict enquiry into the doctrines of those who, from their secret attachment to the sentiments of the Swiss divines, were called Crypto-Calvinists [y], he committed some of them to prison, sent others into banishment, and engaged a certain number by the force of the fecular arm to change their sentiments. Peucer, who had been principally concerned in moderating the rigour of some of Luther's doctrines, felt, in a more especial manner, the severe effects of the elector's displeasure; for he was confined to a comfortless prison, where he lay in the most affecting circumstances of distress until the year 1585, when, having obtained his liberty through the intercession of the prince of Anhalt, who had given his daughter in marriage to Augustus, he

The compliance was fincere; but the order was very different from that mentioned by our author, as appears from the preceding note.

[y] i. e. Hidden, or disguised Calvinists.

retired

[x] It is to be observed, that there were but fifteen of the Saxon doctors convened at Torgaw by the elector; a small number this to give law to the Lutheran church. For an account of the declaration drawn up by this affembly on the points relating to the presence of Christ's body in the eucharist, the omnipresence of that body, and the oral manducation of the fiesh and blood of the divine Saviour, see Hospiniani Concordia Discors, p. 39.

etired to Zerbst, where he ended his days in CENT, xeace  $\lceil z \rceil$ .

SECT. III. PART II. The form of XXXIX. The schemes of the Crypto-Calvinists or fecret abettors of Calvinism) being thus disconcerted, the elector of Saxony, and those princes concert. who had entered into his views, redoubled their zeal and diligence in promoting the Form of Concord that has been already mentioned. Accordingly, various conferences were held preparatory to this important undertaking; and, in the year 1576, while the Saxon divines were convened at Torgaw by the order of Augustus, a treatise was composed by James Andreas, with a view of healing the divisions of the Lutheran church, and as a preservative against the opinions of the reformed doctors [a]. When this production, which received the denomination of the Book of Torgaw from the place where it was composed, had been carefully examined, reviewed, and corrected, by the greatest part of the Lutheran doctors in Germany, the affair was again proposed to the deliberation of a felect number of divines, who met at Berg, a Benedictine monastery in the neighbourhood of Magdeburg [b]. Here all points relating to the

[z] See Schlusselburgii Theologia Calvinistica, lib. ii. p. 207. lib. iii. Pref. & p. 1.—22. 52.—57. 69. lib. iv. p. 246. —Hutteri Concordia Concors, cap. i.—viii.—Arnoldi Histor. Ecclesiast. lib. xvi. cap. xxxii. p. 389 .- 395 .- Loscheri His. toria motuum inter Lutheranos et Reformat. part II. p. 176part III. p. 1.-All these are writers favourable to the rigid Lutherans; see therefore, on the other side, Casp. Peuceri Historia Carcerum et Liberationis Divine, which was published in 8vo, at Zurich, in 1605, by Pezelius.

[a] The term Reformed was used to distinguish the other protestants of various denominations from the Lutherans; and it is equally applied to the friends of episcopacy and presbytery. See the following chapter.

[b] The book that was composed by Andreas and his. affociates at Torgaw, was fent, by the elector of Saxony, to almost all the Lutheran princes, with a view of its being examined,

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

the intended project were accurately weighed, the opinions of the affembled doctors carefully discussed, and the result of all was the famous Form of Concord. The persons who assisted Andreas in the composition of this celebrated work, or at least in the last perusal of it at Berg, were Martin Chemnitz, Nicolas Selneccer, Andrew Musculus, Christopher Cornerus, and David Chytræus [c]. This new confession of the Lutheran saith was adopted first by the Saxons, in consequence of the strict order of Augustus; and their example was followed by the greatest part of the Lutheran churches, by some sooner, by others later [d]. The authority of this confessions mined, approved, and received by them. It was, however, rejected by several princes, and censured and resuted by various doctors. These censures engaged the compilers to review and correct it; and it was from this book, thus changed and new, modeled, that the Form of Concord, published at Berg, was entirely drawn.

[c] The Form of Concord, composed at Torgaw, and reviewed at Berg, confifts of two parts. In the first is contained a system of doctrine, drawn up according to the fancy of the fix doctors here mentioned. In the fecond is exhibited one of the strongest instances of that persecuting and tyrannical spirit, of which the protestants complained in the church of Rome, even a formal condemnation of all those who differed from these fix doctors, particularly in their strange opinions concerning the majesty and omnipresence of Christ's body, and the real manducation of his flesh and blood in the eucharift. This condemnation branded with the denomination of heretics, and excluded from the communion of the church, all Christians, of all nations, who refused to subscribe these doctrines. More particularly in Germany, the terrors of the sword were solicited against there pretended heretics, as may be seen in the famous testament For a full account of the Confession of Torgaw of Brentius. and Berg, see Hospinian's Concordia Discors, where the reader will find large extracts from this confession, with an ample account of the censures it underwent, the opposition that was made to it, and the arguments that were used by its learned adversaries.

[d] A list of the writers who have treated of the Form of Concord, may be found in Jo. Georgii Walchii Introduct.

is fufficiently known, was employed or the two following purposes: first, to terminate controversies which divided the Lutheran hurch, more especially after the death of its sunder; and, fecondly, to preserve that church gainst the opinions of the Reformed in relation to ne eucharist.

CENT. XVI. SEC 7, 111. PART II.

XL. This very Form, however, which was The Form of eligned to restore peace and concord ne church, and had actually produced diffurbance, nis effect in several places, became a source f new tumults, and furnished matter for the nost violent dissensions and contests. It im- is opposed nediately met with a warm opposition from the by the Re-Reformed, and also from all those who were either Calvinista. ecretly attached to their doctrine, or who, at east, were desirous of living in concord and comnunion with them, from a laudable zeal for the common interests of the protestant cause. Nor vas their opposition at all unaccountable, since hey plainly perceived that this Form removed all he flattering hopes they had entertained, of seeing he divisions that reigned among the friends of eligious liberty happily healed, and entirely exluded the Reformed from the communion of the Lutheran church. Hence they were filled with ndignation against the authors of this new Conredut. in Libros Symbolicos, lib. i. cap. vii. p. 707. & Kocheri Biblioth. Theol. Symbolice, p. 188. There are also several unpubished documents relative to this famous confession, of which there is an account in the German work entitled, Unschulde Nachricht. A. 1753, p. 322.—The principal writers who have given the history of the Form of Concord, and the transactions elating to it, are Hospinian, an eminent divine of Zurich, in nis Concordia Discors, and Leonard Hutter, in his Concordia Concors. These two historians have written on opposite sides; and whoever will be at the pains of comparing their accounts with attention and impartiality, will easily perceive where the ruth lies, and receive satisfactory information with respect to he true state of these controversies, and the motives that aninated the contending parties.

fession

CENT. PART ...

seffen of Facto, and exposed their unchantable proceedings in writings full of spirit and velo mence. The Swis doctors, with Hospinian at their head, the Belgic divines [e], those of the Paleticate f, together with the principalities of Arkost and Baden, declared war against the Form of Concord. And accordingly from this period the Lutheran, and more especially the Saxon doctors, were charged with the difagreeable talk of defer ling this new creed and its compilers, in many laborious productions [x].

Aart eres by the La-Therens

XLL Nor were the followers of Zuingle and Calvin the only opposers of this Form of Concord; it found adversaries, even in the very bosom of Lutheranism, and several of the most eminent churches of that communion rejected it with such firmness and resciution, that no arguments or entreaties could engage them to admit it as a rule of faith, or even as a mean of instruction. It was rejected by the church of Nuremberg, by those of Hefe, Pomerania, Holstein, Silesia, Denmark, Brunfwick, and others [b]. But though they all united in oppofing

[e] See Petri Villerii Epistola Apologetica Reformatarum in Belgio Ecclesiarum ad et contra Auctores Libri Bergensis, diti "Concordie."-This work was published a second time, with the annotations of Lud. Gerard a Renesse, by the learned Dr. Gerdes of Groningen, in his Scrinium Antiquarium, seu Miscellan. Groningens. Nov. tom. i. p. 121. Add to these the Ur schulde Nachricht. A. 1747. p. 957.

[f] John Casimir, prince Palatine, convoked an assembly of the reformed divines at Francfort, in the year 1577, in order to reject and annul this Form of Concord. See Hen. Altingü Histor. Eccles. Palatin. fect. clauix. p. 143.

[g] See Jo. Georg. Walchii Introd. in Libros Symbolices

Lutberaner. lib. i. cap. vii. p. 734.

[b] For an account of the ill success the Form of Concerd met with in the duchy of Holstein, see the German work entitled, Die Danische Bibliothec. vol. iv. p. 212. vol. v. p. 355. vol. viii. p. 333 .- 461. vol. ix. p. 1 .- Muhlii Differt. Histor. Theol. Diff. I. de Reformet. Holfat. p. 108.—Arn. Grevü Memoria Pauli ab Eitzen. The transactions in Denmark, in relation

- •

CENT.

opposing it, their opposition was founded on different reasons, nor did they all act in this affair from the same motives and the same PART II. principles. A warm and affectionate veneration for the memory of Melancthon was, with some, the only, or at least the predominant, motive that induced them to declare against the Form in question; they could not behold, without the utmost abhorrence, a production in which the sentiments of this great and excellent man were so rudely treated. In this class we may rank the Lutherans of Holstein. Others were not only animated in their opposition by a regard for Melancthon, but also by a persuasion, that the opinions, condemned in the new creed, were more conformable to truth, than those which were sub-Rituted in their place. A secret attachment to the sentiments of the Helvetic doctors prevented some from approving the Form under consideration; the hopes of uniting the Reformed and Lutheran churches engaged many to declare against it; and a confiderable number refused their assent to it from an apprehension, whether real or pretended, that adding a new creed to the ancient confessions of faith would be really a source of diffurbance and discord in the Lutheran church.

relation to this Form, and the particular ressons for which it was rejected there, may be seen in the Danish Library above quoted, vol. iv. p. 222.—282. and also in Pontoppidan's Annal. Eccles. Danice Diplomatici, tom. iii. p. 456. The last author. evidently proves (p. 476.) a fact which Herman ab Elswich, and other authors, have endeavoured to represent as dubious, pis. that Frederic II. king of Denmark, as soon as he received a copy of the form in question, threw it into the fire, and saw it consumed before his eyes.—The opposition that was made by the Hessians to the same form, may be seen in Tielemanni Visa Theologor. Marpurgenf. p. 99.—Danischen Bibliothec. vol. vii. p. 273-364. tom. ix. p. 1-87.—The ill fate of this famous Confession, in the principalities of Lignitz and Brieg, is amply related in the Unschulde Nachricht. A. 1745. ₱. 173.

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART U. It would be endless to enumerate the different reasons alleged by the different individuals or communities, who declared their diffent from the Form of Concord.

The conduct of Julius, duke of Branswick, in this motter.

XLII. This Form was patronized in a more especial manner by Julius, duke of Brunfwick, to whom, in a great measure, it owed its existence; who had employed both his authority and munificence in order to encourage those who had undertaken to compose it, and had commanded all the ecclesiastics, within his dominions, to receive and subscribe it as a rule of faith. But scarcely was it published, when the zealous prince, changing his mind, suffered the Form to be publicly opposed by Heshusius, and other divines of his university of Helmstadt, and to be excluded from the number of the creeds and confessions that were received by his subjects. The reasons alleged by the Lutherans of Brunswick, in behalf of this step, were, 1st, That the Form of Concord, when printed, differed in several places from the manuscript copy to which they had given their approbation; 2dly, That the doctrine relating to the freedom of the human will was expressed in it without a sufficient degree of accuracy and precision, and was also inculcated in the harsh and improper terms that Luther had employed in treating that subject: 3dly, That the ubiquity, or universal and indefinite presence of Christ's human nature, was therein positively maintained, although the Lutheran church had never adopted any fuch doctrine. Besides these reasons for rejecting the Form of Concord, which were publicly avowed, some perhaps of a secret nature contributed to the remarkable change, which was visible in the sentiments and proceedings of the duke of Brunf-Various methods and negociations were employed to remove the dislike which this prince, and the divines that lived in his territories, had conceived conceived against the Creed of Berg. Particu- CENT. arly, in the year 1583, a convocation of divines from Saxony, Brandenburg, Brunswick, and the PART II. Palatinate, was holden at Quedlinburg for this purpose. But Julius persisted stedfastly in his oppolition, and proposed that the Form of Concord bould be examined, and its authority discussed in a general assembly or synod of the Lutheran church [i].

XLIII. This Form was not only opposed from The Cryptoabroad, but had likewise adversaries in the very make new country which gave it birth. For even in Saxony strempts to many, who had been obliged to subscribe it, be-doctrine. held it with aversion, in consequence of their attachment to the doctrine of Melancthon. During the life of Augustus, they were forced to suppress their sentiments; but as soon as he had paid the last tribute to nature, and was succeeded by Christian I. the moderate Lutherans and the Secret Calvinists resumed their courage. The new elector had been accustomed, from his tender years, to the moderate sentiments of Melancthon, and is also said to have discovered a propensity to the doctrine of the Helvetic church. Under his government, therefore, a fair opportunity was offered to the persons abovementioned of declaring their sentiments and executing their designs. Nor was this opportunity neglected. The attempts to abolish the Form of Concord, that had in time past proved unsuccessful, seemed to be renewed, with a view of opening a door for the entrance of Calvinism into Saxony. The persons who had embarked in this design, were greatly encouraged by the protection they received from several noblemen of the first rank at the Saxon court, and, particularly, from Crellius, the first minister of Christian. Under the auspicious influence of such patrons it was natural to expect success; yet they conducted their affairs with circumspection and prudence. Certain laws were previously enacted, in order to prepare the minds of the people for the intended revolution in the doctrine of the church; and, some time after [k], the form of exorcism was omitted in the administration of baptism [1]. These measures were followed by others still more alarming to the rigid Lutherans; for not only 1 new German catechism, favourable to the purpose of the secret Calvinists, was industriously distributed among the people, but also a new edition of the Bible, in the same language, enriched with the observations of Henry Salmuth, which were artfully accommodated to this purpose, was, in the year 1591, published at Dresden. The consequences of these vigorous measures were violent tumults and feditions among the people, which the magistrates endeavoured to suppress, by punishing with severity such of the clergy as distinguished themselves by their oppo-

[i] See Leon. Hutteri Concordia Concors, cap. xlv. p. 1051. -Phil. Jul. Richtmeyeri Braunschweig Kirchen Historie, part III. cap. viii. p. 483.—See also the authors mentioned by Chrift. Matth. Pfaffius, in his Alla et Scripta Ecclesia Wirtem-Bergensts, p. 62. & Histor. Literar. Theologie, part II. p. 423 .-For an account of the convocation of Quedlinburg, and the acls that passed in that assembly, see the Danische Bib-Gather. part VIII. p. 595.

opening

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

[k] In the year 1591.

The custom of exorcising, or casting out evil spirits, was used in the sourch century at the admission of catechumens, and was afterwards absurdly applied in the baptism of infants. This application of it was retained by the greatest part of the Lutheran churches. It was indeed abolished by the elector, Christian I. but was restored after his death; and the opposition that had been made to it by Crellius was the chief reason of his unhappy end. See Justi H. Bohmeri Jus Ecclesias. Protestant. tom. iii. p. 843. Ed. Secund. Hale, 1727; as also a German work of Melchior Krast, entitled, Geschichte des Exercismi, p. 401.

CENT.

fition to the views of the court. But the whole plan of this religious revolution was overturned by the unexpected death of Christian, which hap-pened in the year 1591. Affairs then assumed their former aspect. The doctors, who had been principally concerned in the execution of this unfuccessful project, were committed to prison, or sent into banishment, after the death of the elector; and its chief encourager and patron, Crellius, suffered death in the year 1601, as the fruit of his temerity [m].

XLIV. Towards the conclusion of this century, The dispute a new controversy was imprudently set on foot at by Huber. Wittenberg, by a Świss named Samuel Huber, professor of divinity in that university. The Calvinistical tenets of absolute predestination and unconditional decrees were extremely offensive to this adventurous doctor, and even excited his warmest indignation. Accordingly he affirmed, and taught publicly, that all mankind were elected from eternity by the Supreme Being to everlasting salvation, and accused his colleagues in particular, and the Lutheran divines in general, of a propenfity to the doctrine of Calvin, on account of their afferting, that the divine election was confined to those, whose faith, foreseen by an omniscient God, rendered them the proper objects of his redeeming mercy. The opinion of Huber, as is now acknowleged by many learned men, differed more in words than in reality, from the doctrine of the Lutheran church; for he did no more than explain in a new method, and with a different turn of phrase, what that church had always taught concerning the unlimited extent of the love of God, as embracing the whole human race, and excluding none by an abfiliate decree from everlasting falvation. However, as a diagreeable experience and repeated examples had abundantly thewn, that new methods of explaining or proving even received doctrines, were as much adapted to excite divisions and contests, as the introduction of new errors, Huber was exhorted to adhere to the ancient method of proposing the doctrine of Election, and, instead of his own peculiar forms of expresfion, to make use of those that were received and authorised by the church. To this compliance he refuled to submit, alleging, that it was contrary to the dictates of his conscience; while his patrons and disciples, in many places, gave several indications of a turbulent and seditious zeal for his cause. These considerations engaged the magistrates of Wittenberg to depose him from his office, and to fend him into banishment  $[\pi]$ .

[m] See Arnold's Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, part II. book XVI. cap. xxxii. p. 863; as also the authors mentioned by Herm. Ascan. Engelcken, in his Dissertat. de Nic. Crellie, ejusque Supplicio, Rostochii, 1724.

TANT TO PART TO

The judgment that ought to be formed concerning all these conturnises.

XLV. The controversies, of which a fuccinct account has now been given, and others of inferior moment, which it is needless to mention, were highly detrimental to the true interests of the Lutheran church, as is abundantly known by all who are acquainted with the history of this century. It must also be acknowledged, that the manner of conducting and deciding these debates, the spirit of the disputants, and the proceedings of the judges, if we form our estimate of them by the sentiments that prevail among the wifer fort of men in modern times, must be considered as inconsistent with equity, moderation, and charity. It betrays, nevertheless, a want, both of candour and justice, to inveigh indifcriminately against the authors of CENT. these misfortunes, and to represent them as totally destitute of rational sentiments and virtuous principles. And it is yet more unjust to throw the whole blame upon the triumphant party, while the suffering side are all fondly represented as men of unblemished virtue, and worthy of a better fate. It ought not certainly to be a matter of surprise, that persons long accustomed to a state of darkness, and suddenly transported from it into the blaze of day, did not, at first, behold the objects that were presented to their view with that distinctness and precision which are natural to those who have long enjoyed the light. And fuch really was the case of the first protestant doctors, who were delivered from the gloom of papal superstition and tyranny. Besides, there was something gross and indelicate in the reigning spirit of this age, which made the people, not only tolerate, but even applaud many things relating both to the conduct of life and the management of controversy, which the more polished manners of modern times cannot relish, and which, indeed, are by no means worthy of imita-As to the particular motives or intentions that guided each individual in this troubled scene of controversy, whether they acted from the suggestions of malice and resentment, or from an upright and fincere attachment to what they looked upon to be truth, or how far these two fprings of action were jointly concerned in their conduct, all this must be left to the decision of Him alone, whose privilege it is to search the heart, and to discern its most hidden intentions, and its most fecret motives.

[n] For an account of the writers that appeared in this controversy, see Christ. Matth. Plassic Introduction in Histor. Liter. Theologie, part II. lib. iii. p. 431.

XLVI. The Lutheran church furnished, during The printhis century, a long list of considerable doctors, cipal doctors, and writers who illustrated, in their writings, the various of this branches of theological science. After Luther eentury.

cipal doctors

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. and Melancthon, who stand foremost in this list, on account of their superior genius and erudition, we may select the following writers as the most eminent, and as persons whose names are worthy of being preserved in the annals of literature; viz. Weller, Chemnitz, Brentius, Flacius, Regius, Major, Amsdorf, Sarcerius, Matthesius, Wigandus, Lambertus, Andreas, Chytræus, Selneccer, Bucer, Fagius, Cruciger, Strigelius, Spangenberg, Judex, Heshusius, Westphal, Æpinus, Osiander, and others [0].

CHAP. II.

The History of the Reformed [p] Church.

The conftitution of the Reformed church I. THE Reformed church, which was formerly denominated by its adversaries after its [o] For an ample account of these Lutheran doctors, see Melchior Adam's Vita Theologorum, and Louis Elias Dupin's Bibliotheque des Auteurs separés de la Communion de l'Église Romaine au xvii. Siecle. The lives of several of these divines have been also severally composed by different authors of the present times; sor example, that of Weller by Læmelius, that of Flacius by Ritter, those of Heshusius and Spangenberg by Leuckseldt, that of Fagius by Feverlin, that of Chytraus by Schutz, that of Bucer by Verportenius, those of Westphal and Æpinus by Arn. Grevius, &c.

of Reformed was given to those protestant churches which did not embrace the doctrine and discipline of Luther. The title was first assumed by the French protestants, and afterwards became the common denomination of all the Calvinistical churches on the continent. I say, on the continent; since in England the term Resormed is generally used as standing in opposition to popery alone. Be that as it may, this part of Dr. Mosheim's work would have been, perhaps, with more propriety entitled, 'The History of the Resormed Churches,' than, 'The History of the Resormed Church.' This will appear still more evident from the following note.

founders

founders Zuingle and Calvin, differs considerably in CENT. its nature and constitution, from all other ecclesiastical communities. Every other Christian church hath some common centre of union, and its members are connected by some common bond of doctrine and discipline. But this is far from being the case of the Reformed church [q], whose several [q] This, and the following observations, are designed to give the Lutheran church an air of unity, which is not to be found in the reformed. But there is a real fallacy in this specious representation of things. The reformed church, when considered in the true extent of the term, comprehends all those religious communities that separated themselves from the church of Rome; and, in this sense, includes the Lutheran church, as well as the others. And even when this epithet is used in opposition to the community sounded by Luther, it represents not a single church, as the episcopal, presbyterian, or independent, but rather a collection of churches; which, though they be invisibly united by a belief and profession of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, yet frequent separate places of worship, and have each a visible centre of external union peculiar to themselves, which is formed by certain peculiarities in their respective rules of public worship and ecclesiaftical government*. An attentive examination of the discipline, polity, and worship of the churches of England, Scotland, Holland, and Switzerland, will set this matter in the clearest light. The first of these churches, being governed by bishops, and not admitting the validity of presbyterian ordination, differs from the other three more than any of these differ from each other. There are, however, peculiarities of government and worship that distinguish the church of Holland from that of Scotland. The institution of deacons, the ule of forms for the celebration of the sacraments, an ordinary form of prayer, the observance of the festivals of Christmas, Easter, Ascension day, and Whitsuntide, are established in the Dutch church; and it is well known that the church of Scotland greatly differs from it in these respects.—But after all, to what does the pretended uniformity among the Lutherans amount? Are not some of the Lutheran churches governed by bishops, while others are ruled by elders? It shall moreover be shewn, in its proper place, that even in point of doctrine, the Lutheran churches are not so very remarkable for their uniformity.

See the general sketch of the state of the church in the eighteenth century, in the fixth volume, paragraph XXI. and the notes (p) & (q).

CENT. SECT. III.

branches are neither united by the same system of doctrine, nor by the same mode of worship, nor yet by the same form of government. It is farther to be observed, that this church does not require from its ministers, either uniformity in their private sentiments, or in their public doctrine, but permits them to explain, in different ways, feveral doctrines of no small moment, provided that the great and fundamental principles of Christianity, and the practical precepts of that divine religion, be main-tained in their original purity. This great community, therefore, may be properly confidered as an ecclesiastical body composed of many churches, that vary, more or less, from each other in their form and constitution; but which are preserved, however, from anarchy and schism, by a general spirit of equity and toleration, that runs through the whole lystem, and renders variety of opinion consistent with fraternal union.

The raules that produced this state of things.

II. This indeed was not the original state and constitution of the Reformed church, but was the result of a certain combination of events and cireumstances, that threw it, by a sort of necessity, into this ambiguous form. The doctors of Switzerland, from whom it derived its origin, and Calvin, who was one of its principal founders, employed all their credit, and exerted their most vigorous efforts, in order to reduce all the churches, which embraced their fentiments, under one rule of faith, and the same form of ecclesiastical go-And although they considered the vernment. Lutherans as their brethren, yet they shewed no marks of indulgence to those who openly favoured the opinions of Luther, concerning the eucharift, the person of Christ, predestination, and other matters that were connected with these doctrines: would they permit the other protestant churches, that embraced their communion, to deviate from their

CENT.

their example in this respect. A new scene, however, which was exhibited in Britain, contributed sect. III. much to enlarge this narrow and contracted system [ ART 11. of church communion. For when the violent contest concerning the form of ecclesiastical government, and the nature and number of those rites and ceremonies that were proper to be admitted into the public worship, arose between the abettors of episcopacy and the puritans [r], it was judged necessary to extend the borders of the reformed church, and rank, in the class of its true members, even those who departed, in some respects, from the ecclesiastical polity and doctrines established at Geneva. This spirit of toleration and indulgence grew still more forbearing and comprehensive after the famous fynod of Dordrecht. For though the fentiments and doctrines of the Arminians were rejected and condemned in that numerous affembly, yet they gained ground privately, and infinuated themselves into the minds of many. The church of England, in the reign of Charles I. publicly renounced the opinions of Calvin relating to the divine decrees, and made several attempts to model its doctrine and institutions after the laws, tenets, and customs, that were observed by the primitive Christians [s]. On the other hand, several Lutheran congregations in Germany entertained a strong pro-

[r] The Puritans, who inclined to the presbyterian form of church government, of which Knox was one of the earliest abettors in Britain, derived this denomination from their pretending to a purer method of worship than that which had been established by Edward VI. and queen Elizabeth.

[s] This affertion is equivocal. Many members of the church of England, with archbishop Laud at their head, did, indeed, propagate the doctrines of Arminius, both in their pulpits and in their writings. But it is not accurate to say that the church of England renounced publicly, in that reign, the opinions of Calvin. See this matter farther discussed in the pote (m), Cent. XVII. sect. II. p. II. ch. II. paragraph xx.

penfity

pensity to the doctrines and discipline of the church of Geneva; though they were restrained from declaring themselves fully and openly on this head, by their apprehensions of forfeiting the privileges they derived from their adherence to the confession of Augsburg. The French refugees also, who had long been accustomed to a moderate way of thinking in religious matters, and whose national turn led them to a certain freedom of inquiry, being difperfed abroad in all parts of the protestant world, rendered themselves so agreeable, by their wit and eloquence, that their example excited a kind of emulation in favour of religious liberty. All these circumstances, accompanied with others, whose influence was less palpable, though equally real, gradually instilled such a spirit of lenity and forbearance into the minds of protestants, that at this day, all Christians, if we except Roman catholics, Socinians, Quakers, and Anabaptists, may claim a place among the members of the reformed church. It is true that great reluctance was discovered by many against this comprehensive scheme of church communion; and, even in the times in which we live, the ancient and less charitable manner of proceeding hath several patrons, who would be glad to see the doctrines and institutions of Calvin univerfally adopted and rigorously observed. These rigid doctors, however, are not very numerous, nor is their influence confiderable. And it may be affirmed with truth, that, both in point of number and authority, they are much inferior to the friends of moderation, who reduce within a narrow compals the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, on the belief of which salvation depends, exercise forbearance and fraternal charity towards those who explain certain doctrines in a manner peculiar to themselves, and desire to see the enclosure (if I may use that expression) of the reformed church rendered rendered as large and comprehensive as is pos-fible [s].

III. The founder of the Reformed church was Ulric Zuingle, a native of Switzerland, and a man of uncommon penetration and acuteness, accompanied with an ardent zeal for truth. This great man was for removing out of the churches, and by Zuingle. abolishing in the ceremonies and appendages of public worship, many things which Luther was disposed to treat with toleration and indulgence, fuch as images, altars, wax-tapers, the form of exorcism, and private confession. He aimed at nothing so much as establishing, in his country, a form of divine worship remarkable for its simplicity, and as far remote as could be from every thing that might have the smallest tendency to nourish a spirit of superstition [t]. Nor were these the only CIT-

[s] The annals of theology have not yet been enriched with a full and accurate History of the Reformed Church. This task was indeed undertaken by Scultet, and even carried down so far as his own time, in his Annales Evangelii Renovati; but the greatest part of this work is lost. Theod. Haszus, who proposed to give the Annals of the Reformed Church, was prevented by death from fulfilling his purpose. The famous work of James Basnage, published in two volumes 4to. at Rotterdam, in the year 1725, under the title of Histoire de la Religion des Eglises Resormées, instead of giving a regular history of the reformed church, is only designed to shew that its peculiar and distinguishing doctrines are not new inventions, but were taught and embraced in the earliest ages of the church. Maimbourg's Histoire du Calvinisme is remarkable for nothing but the partiality of its author, and the wilful errors with which it abounds.

[1] The design of Zuingle was certainly excellent; but in the execution of it perhaps he went too far, and consulted rather the dictates of reason than the real exigencies of human nature in its present state. The present union between soul and body, which operate together in the actions of moral agents, even in those who appear the most abstracted and refined, renders it necessary to consult the external senses, as well as the intellectual powers, in the institution of public worship.

CENT. PART II. The foundation of the Reformed church laid circumstances in which he dissered from the Saxon reformer; for his fentiments concerning feveral points of theology, and more especially his opinions relating to the facrament of the Lord's fupper, varied widely from those of Luther. The greatest part of these sentiments and opinions were adopted in Switzerland, by those who had joined themselves to Zuingle in promoting the cause of the Reformation, and were by them transmitted to all the Helvetic churches that threw off the yoke of Rome. From Switzerland these opinions were propagated among the neighbouring nations, by the ministerial labours and the theological writings of the friends and disciples of Zuingle: and thus the primitive Reformed church, that was founded by this eminent ecclesiastic, and whose extent at first was not very considerable, gathered strength by degrees, and daily made new acquisitions.

The controverly between the Lutheraus and Reformed concerning the eucharift. IV. The separation, between the Lutheran and Swiss churches, was chiefly occasioned by the doctrine of Zuingle, concerning the sacrament of the Lord's supper. Luther maintained, that the body and blood of Christ were really, though in a manner far beyond human comprehension, present in the eucharist, and were exhibited together with the bread and wine. On the contrary, the Swiss reformer looked upon the bread and wine in no other light, than as the signs and symbols of the absent worship. Besides, between a worship purely and philosophically rational, and a service grossly and palpably superstitious, there are many intermediate steps and circumstance, by which a rational service may be rendered more affecting and awakening, without becoming superstitious. A noble edifice, solema music, a well-ordered set of external gestures, though they do not, in themselves, render our prayers more acceptable to the Deity, than if they were offered up without any of these circumstances, produce, nevertheless, a good effect. They elevate the mind, they give it a composed and solemn frame, and thus contribute to the fervour of its devotion.

body

body and blood of Christ; and from the year 1524, he propagated this doctrine in a public manner by his writings, having entertained and taught it privately before that period [u]. In a little time after this [w], his example was followed by Œcolampadius, a divine of Basil, and one of the most learned men of that century [x]. But they were both opposed with obstinacy and spirit by Luther and his affociates, particularly those of the circle of Suabia. In the mean time, Philip, landgrave of Hesse, apprehending the pernicious effects that these debates might have upon the affairs of the protestants, which were, as yet, in the fluctuating and unfettled state that marks the infancy of all great revolutions, was desirous of putting an end to these differences, and for that purpose, appointed a conference at Marpurg, between Zuingle, Luther, and other doctors of both parties [y]. This meeting, however, only covered the flame instead of extinguishing it; and the pacific prince, seeing it impossible to bring about a definitive treaty of peace and concord between these jarring divines, was obliged to rest satisfied with having engaged them to consent to a truce. Luther and Zuingle came to an agreement about feveral points; but the

CBNT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II

[u] Zuingle certainly taught this doctrine in private before the year 1524, as appears from Gerdes' Historia Renovat. Evangelii, tom. i. Append. p. 228.

[w] In the year 1525.

[x] Jo. Conr. Fuessini Centuria I. Epissol. Theolog. Reformat. p. 31. 35. 44. 49.— © Ecolampadius was not less remarkable for his extraordinary modesty, his charitable, sorbearing, and pacific spirit, and his zeal for the progress of vital and practical religion, than for his prosound erudition, which he seemed rather studious to conceal, than to display.

Bucer, and Hideon. Luther had with him Melancthon and Justus Jonas from Saxony, together with Osiander, Brentius, and Agricola.

prin-

principal matter in debate,—that which regarded Christ's presence in the eucharist,—was left undecided; each party appealing to the Fountain of wisdom to terminate this controversy, and expressing their hopes that time and impartial resection might discover and confirm the truth [z].

The progress of these disputes so far down as the death of Luther. V. The reformed church had scarcely been founded in Switzerland by Zuingle, when this Christian hero fell in a battle that was fought, in the year 1530, between the protestants of Zurich, and their Roman catholic compatriots, who drew the sword in defence of popery. It was not indeed to perform the sanguinary office of a soldier that Zuingle was present at this engagement, but with a view to encourage and animate, by his counsels and exhortations, the valiant defenders of the protestant cause [a]. After his death, several Lutheran doctors

[z] Ruchat, Histoire de la Reformation de la Suisse, vol. i. passim, vol. ii. liv. vi. p. 463.—Hottinger, Helvetische Kirchen-Geschichte, part III. p. 27. 51. 483.—Val. Ern. Loscher, Historia Motuum, part I. cap. ii. iii. p. 55. cap. vi. p. 143.—Fueslini Beytrage zur Schweizer Resormation, tom. iv. p. 120.

[a] The Lutherans, who consider this unhappy fate of Zuingle as a reproach upon that great man in particular, and upon the reformed church in general, discover a gross ignorance of the genius and manners of the Swiss nation in this century. For as all the inhabitants of that country are at present trained to arms, and obliged to take the field when the defeace of their country requires it, so in the time of Zuingle this obligation was so general, that neither the ministers of the gospel, nor the professors of theology, were exempted from this military fervice. Accordingly, in the same battle in which Zuingle fell, Jerome Potanus, one of the theological doctors of Balil, also lost his life. See Fueslini Centuria I. Epistolar. Theel. Reformator. p. 84. Erasmus also spoke in a very unfriendly manner of the death of Zuingle and his friend Œcolampadius. See Jortin's Life of Erasmus, vol. i. p. 522. It is not therefore surprising to find the bigoted Sir Thomas More infulting (with the barbarity that superstition seldom fails to produce in a narrow and peevish mind) the memory of these two eminent reformers, in a letter to the furious and turbulent doctors of the more moderate fort, and particularly Martin Bucer, used their utmost endeavours to bring about some kind of reconciliation between the contending parties. For this purpose they exhorted the jarring theologians to concord, interpreted the points in dispute with a prudent regard to the prejudices of both sides, admonished them of the pernicious consequences that must attend the prolongation of these unhappy contests, and even went so far as to express the respective sentiments of the contending doctors in terms of considerable ambiguity and latitude, that thus the defired union might be the more easily effected. There is no doubt, that the intentions and designs of these zealous interceffors were pious and upright [b]; but it will be difficult to decide, whether the means they employed were adapted to promote the end they had in view. Be that as it may, these pacific counsels of Bucer excited divisions in Switzerland; for some persevered obstinately in the doctrine of. Zuingle, while others adopted the explications and modifications of his doctrine, offered by Bucer [c]. But these divisions and commotions had not the least effect on that reconciliation with Luther, which was earnestly desired by the pious and moderate doctors of both parties. The efforts of Bucer were turbulent Cochlæus; of which the following words shew the spirit of the writer: Postrema ea suit, quam de Zuinglio et Ecolampadio scriptam missti, quorum nunciata mors mihi lætitiam attulit.—Sublatos e medio esse tam immanes Fidei Christianæ hostes, tam intentos ubique in omnem perimendæ pietatis occasionem, jure gaudere possum." Jortin, ibid. vol. ii. p. 702. App. No. xvi. N.

CENT. XVI. SECTIII. PART. II.

[b] See Alb. Menon. Verpoorten, Comment. de Mart. Bucero, et ejus sententia de Cana Domini, sect. ix. p. 23. published in 8vo. at Coburg, in the year 1709.—Loscheri Histor. Motuum, part I. lib. ii. cap. i. p. 181. and part II. lib. iii. cap. ii. p. 15.

[c] Fueslini Centur. I. Epistolar. Theolog. p. 162. 170. 181. 190, &c.

more successful out of Switzerland, and particularly among those divines in the upper parts of German, who inclined to the fentiments of the Helvetic church; for they retired from the communion of that church, and joined themselves to Luther by a public act, which was fent to Wittenberg, in the year 1536, by a solemn deputation appointed for that purpose  $\lceil d \rceil$ . The Swifs divines could not be brought to so great a length. There was, however, still some prospect of a reconciliation evenbetween them and the Lutherans. prospect entirely disappeared in the year 1544, when Luther published his Confession of faith in relation to the facrament of the Lord's supper, which was directly opposite to the doctrine of Zuingle and his followers on that head. doctors of Zurich pleaded their cause publicly against the Saxon reformer in the following year; and thus the purposes of the advocates of peace were totally defeated [e].

The transnations that fucceeded the death of Luther. VI. The death of Luther, which happened in the year 1546, was an event that feemed adapted to calm these commotions, and to revive, in the breasts of the moderate and pacific, the hopes of a reconciliation between the contending parties. For this union, between the Lutherans and Zuinglians, was so ardently desired by Melancthon and his followers, that this great man left no means unemployed to effect it, and seemed resolved, rather to submit to a dubious and forced peace, than to see those slaming discords perpetuated, which reslected such dishonour on the protestant cause. On the other hand, this salutary work seemed to be facilitated by the theological system that was adopted by John Calvin, a native of Noyon in France, who was pastor and professor of divinity at Geneva, and whose genius, learning, eloquence, and talents, rendered him respectable, even in the eyes of his enemies. This great man, whose particular friendship for Melancthon was an incidental circumstance highly favourable to the intended reconciliation, proposed an explication of the point in debate, that modified the crude hypothesis of Zuingle, and made use of all his credit and authority among the Swiss, and more particularly at Zurich, where he was held in the highest veneration, in order to obtain their affent to it [f]. The explication he proposed was not, indeed, favourable to the doctrine of Christ's bodily presence in the eucharist, which he persisted in denying; he supposed, however, that a certain divine virtue, or efficacy, was communicated by Christ, with the bread and wine, to those who approached this holy facrament with a lively faith, and with upright hearts; and, to render this notion still more fatisfactory, he expressed it in almost the same terms which the Lutherans employed in inculcating their doctrine of Christ's real presence in the eucharift [g]. Indeed the great and common error of all those, who, from a desire of peace, assumed the character of arbitrators in this controversy, lay in this, that they aimed rather at an uniformity of terms than of fentiments, and seemed satisfied when they had engaged the contending parties to use the fame

[e] Loscheri Hist. part i. lib. ii. cap. iv. p. 341.

adopted

[d] Loscheri Hist. cap. ii. p. 205.—Ruchat, Histoire de la Reformat. de la Suisse, tom. v. p. 535.—Hottingeri Histore Eccles. Helvet. tom. iii. lib. vi. p. 702.

[f] Christ. Aug. Salig, Historia Aug. Confessionis, tom. ii. lih. vii. cap. iii. p. 1075.

[g] Calvin went certainly too far in this matter; and, in his explication of the benefits that arise from a worthy commemoration of Christ's death in the eucharist, he dwelt too grossly upon the allegorical expressions of scripture, which the papists had so egregiously abused, and talked of really cating by faith the body, and drinking the blood of Christ.

XVI.
SECT. III.

fame words and phrases, though their real difference in opinion remained the same, and each explained these ambiguous or figurative terms in a manner agreeable to their respective systems.

The concord, fo much defired, did not, however, feem to advance much. Melancthon, although he stood foremost in the rank of those who longed impatiently for it, had not courage enough to embark openly in the execution of such a perilous project. Besides, after the death of Luther, his enemies attacked him with redoubled fury, and gave him so much disagreeable occupation, that he had neither that leisure, nor that tranquillity of mind, which were necessary to prepare his measures properly for fuch an arduous undertaking. A new obstacle to the execution of this pacific project was also presented, by the intemperate zeal of Joachim Westphal, pastor at Hamburg, who, in the year 1552, renewed, with greater vehemence than ever, this deplorable controversy, which had been for some time suspended; and who, after Flacius, was the most obstinate defender of the opinions of Luther. This violent theologian attacked with that spirit of acrimony and vehemence, that too remarkably appeared in the polemic writings of Luther, the act of uniformity, by which the churches of Geneva and Zurich declared their agreement concerning the doctrine of the eucharist. In the book which he published with this view [b], he censured, the utmost severity, the variety of sentiments concerning the facrament of the Lord's supper, observable in the reformed church, and maintained, with his usual warmth and obvagant tenets that Luther never so much as thought of, and breathes the most virulent spirit of persecution, is entitled, Farrago confusanearum et inter se dissidentium de S. Como opinionum ex Sacramentariorum Libris congesta."

Stinacy,

thinacy, the opinion of Luther on that subject. This engaged Calvin to enter the lists with Westphal, whom he treated with as little lenity and forbearance, as the rigid Lutherans had shewn towards the Helvetic churches. The consequences of this debate were, that Calvin and Westphal had, respectively, their zealous defenders and patrons; hence the breach widened, the spirits were heated, and the flame of controversy was kindled anew with such violence and fury, that to extinguish it entirely seemed to be a talk beyond the reach of human wildom or human power [i].

CRNT.

VII. These disputes were unhappily augmented, The conconcerning the decrees of God, with respect to the defination eternal condition of men, which was set on foot by Calvin, and became an inexhaustible source of intricate researches, and abstruse, subtile, and inexplicable questions. The most ancient Helvetic doctors were far from adopting the doctrine of those, who represent the Deity as assigning from all eternity, by an absolute, arbitrary, and unconditional decree, to some everlasting happiness, and to others endless misery, without any previous regard to the moral characters and circumstances of either. Their sentiments seemed to differ very little from those of the Pelagians; nor did they hesitate in declaring, after the example of Zuingle, that the kingdom of heaven was open to all who lived according to the dictates of right reason [k]. Calvin had adopted a quite different different system with respect to the divine decrees. He maintained, that the everlasting condition of mankind in a future world was determined from all eternity by the unchangeable order of the Deity, and that this absolute determination of his will and good pleasure, was the only source of happiness or misery to every individual. This opinion was in a very short time propagated through all the reformed churches, by the writings of Calvin, and by the ministry of his disciples; and, in some places, it was inferted in the national creeds and confessions, and thus made a public article of faith. The unhappy controversy, which took its rise from this doctrine, was opened at Strasburg, in the year 1560, by Jerome Zanchius, an Italian ecclesiastic, who was particularly attached to the fentiments of Calvin; and was afterwards carried on by others with fuch zeal and affiduity, that it drew, in an extraordinary manner, the attention of the public, and tended as much to exasperate the passions, and foment the discord of the contending parties, as the dispute about the eucharist had already done [1].

[i] Loscheri Historia Motuum, part II. lib. iii. cap. viii. p. 83.-Molleri Cimeria Literata, tom. iii. p. 642. Arn. Grevii Memoria Joac. Westphali, p. 62. 106.

[4] For the proof of this affertion, see Dallzi Apologia pro ductus Ecclefiarum Gallicar. Synodis adversus Fred. Spanbeim, part IV. p. 946-Jo. Alphons. Turretini Epistol. ad Antifitem Cantuariensem, which is inserted in the Bibliotheque Germanique tom. zin. p. 92.—Simon, Bibliotheque Critique, published under the fictitious name of Sainior, TOL. IT, tom.

The discord is carried to the greatest beight.

VIII. The Helvetic doctors had no prospect left of calming the troubled spirits, and tempering, at least, the vehemence of these deplorable seuds, but the moderation of the Saxon divines, who were the disciples of Melancthon, and who, tom. iii. ch. xxviii p. 292. 298. and also a book, entitled, Observationes Gallice in Formul. Consensus Helveticam, p. 52. The very learned Dr. Gerdes, instead of being persuaded by these testimonies, maintains, on the contrary (in his Miscellan. Groningens. tom. ii. p. 476, 477.) that the sentiments of Calvin were the same with those of the ancient Swiss doctors. But this excellent author may be resuted, even from his own account of the tumults that were occasioned in Switzerland, by the opinion that Calvin had propagated in relation to the divise decrees.

[/] Loscheri Historia Motuum, part III. lib. v. cap. ii. p. 27. S. c. x. p. 227.—Salig, Historia August. Consessioni, tom. i. lib. ii. cap. xiii. p. 441.

breathing

breathing the pacific spirit of their master, seemed, after his death, to have nothing so much at heart as the restoration of concord and union in the protestant church. Their designs, however, were not carried on with that caution and circumspection, with that prudent forelight, or that wife attention to the nature of the times, which always distinguished the transactions of Melancthon, and which the critical nature of the cause they were engaged in, indispensably required. And hence they had already taken a step, which threatened to render ineffectual all the remedies they could apply to the healing of the present disorders. For, by dispersing artful and insidious writings, with a defign to seduce the ministers of the church, and the studious youth, into the sentiments of the Swiss divines, or, at least, to engage them to treat these sentiments with toleration and forbearance, they drew upon themselves the indignation of their adversaries, and ruined the pacific cause in which they had embarked. It was this conduct that gave occasion to the composition of that famous Form of Concord, which condemned the fentiments of the reformed churches in relation to the person of Christ, and the sacrament of the Lord's supper. And as this Form is received by the greatest part of the Lutherans, as one of the articles of their religion, hence arises an insuperable obstacle to all schemes of reconciliation and concord.

IX. So much did it seem necessary to premise what those concerning the causes, rise, and progress of the things are, controverly, which formed the separation that most worstill subsists between the Lutheran and reformed thy of obchurches. Thence it will be proper to pro- the rife and ceed to an account of the internal state of the progress of latter, and to the history of its progress and revolations. The history of the reformed church, church. during this century, comprehends two distinct periods. A A 2

fervation in the Reformed

CENT. periods. The first commences with the year 1519, when Zuingle withdrew from the communion of PART II. Rome, and began to form a Christian church beyond the bounds of the pope's jurisdiction; and it extends to the time of Calvin's settlement at Geneva, where he acquired the greatest reputation and authority. The second period takes in the rest of this century.

During the first of these periods, the Helvetic church, which assumed the title of Reformed after the example of the French protestants in its neighbourhood, who had chosen this denomination, in order to distinguish themselves from the catholics, was very inconsiderable in its extent, and was confined to the cantons of Switzerland. It was indeed augmented by the accession. of some small states in Suabia and Alface, such as the city of Strasbourg, and some little republics. But, in the year 1536, these petty states changed sides, through the suggestions and influence of Bucer, returned to the communion of the Saxon church, and thus made their peace with Luther. The other religious communities, which had abandoned the church of Rome, either openly embraced the doctrine of Luther, or consisted of persons, who did not agree in their theological opinions, and who really seemed to stand in a kind of neutrality between the contending parties. All things being duly considered, it appears probable enough that the church founded by Zuingle, would have remained still confined to its original limits, had not Calyin arisen, to augment its extent, authority, and lustre. For the natural and political character of the Swifs, neither bent towards the lust of conquest, nor the grasping views of ambition, discovered itself in their religious transactions. And, as a spirit of contentment with what they had, prevented their aiming aiming at an augmentation of their territory, so CENT. did a similar spirit hinder them from being ex- XVI. tremely solicitous about enlarging the borders of PART II. their church.

X. In this infant state of the reformed church, The religithe only point that prevented its union with that first exthe followers of Luther, was the doctrine they eited divi-taught with respect to the sacrament of the Lord's tween the supper. This first controversy, indeed, soon pro-Swift and duced a second, relating to the person of Jesus the Luther rame. Christ; which, nevertheless, concerned only a part of the Lutheran church [m]. The Lutheran divines of Suabia, in the course of their debates with those of Switzerland, drew an argument in favour of the real presence of Christ's body and blood in the eucharist, from the following proposition: that "all the properties of the divine nature, and consequently its omnipresence, were "communicated to the human nature of Christ "by the hypostatic union." The Swiss doctors, in order to destroy the force of this argument, de-nied this communication of the divine attributes to Christ's human naturé; and denied, more especially, the ubiquity or omnipresence of the man Jesus. And hence arose that most intricate and abstruse controversy concerning ubiquity, and the communication of properties, which produced so many learned and unintelligible treatifes, so many subtile disputes, and occasioned such a multitude of acculations and invectives.

[m] It was only a certain number of those Lutherans, who were much more rigid in their doctrine than Luther himself, that believed the ubiquity or omnipresence of Christ's person, considered as a man. By this we may see that the Lutherans have their divisions as well as the reformed, of which several instances may be yet given in the course of this history.

CENT. XVI. BECT. di. PART di.

It is proper to observe, that, at this time, the Helvetic church universally embraced the doctrine of Zuingle concerning the eucharist. doctrine, which differed considerably from that of Calvin, amounted to the following propositions: "That the bread and wine were no more than a " representation of the body and blood of Christ; or, in other words, the signs appointed to de-" note the benefits that were conferred upon man-"kind, in consequence of the death of Christ; "that, therefore, Christians derived no other fruit from the participation of the Lord's supper, than « a mere commemoration and remembrance of "the merits of Christ, which, according to an " expression, common in the mouths of the advo-" cates of this doctrine, was the only thing that was " properly meant by the Lord's supper [n]." Bucer, whose leading principle was the desire of peace and concord, endeavoured to correct and modify this doctrine in such a manner, as to give it a certain degree of conformity to the hypothesis of Luther; but the memory of Zuingle was too fresh in the minds of the Swiss, to permit their acceptance of these corrections and modifications, or to fuffer them to depart, in any respect, from the doctrine of that eminent man, who had founded their church, and been the instrument of their deliverance from the tyranny and superstition of Rome. XI. In the year 1541, John Calvin, who fur-

John Calvin the principal founder of the Reformed church.

[n] Nibil esse in Cana quam memoriam Christi. That this was the real opinion of Zuingle, appears evidently from various testimonies, which may be seen in the Museum Helveticum, tom. i. p. 485. 490. tom. iii. p. 631.—This is also confirmed by the following sentence in his book concerning baptism; (tom. ii. op. p. 85.) "Cana Dominica non aliud quam Commemorationis nomen memtur." Compare, with all this, Fuessini Centur. I. Epistolar. Theologor. Reformator. p. 255. 262, Sec.

passed almost all the doctors of this age in k-

borious

borious application, constancy of mind, force of CENT. eloquence, and extent of genius, returned to Genius. neva, whence the opposition of his enemies PART II. had obliged him to retire. On his settlement in that city, the affairs of the new church were committed to his direction [0]; and he acquired also a high degree of influence in the political administration of that republic. This changed entirely the face of affairs, and gave a new aspect to the reformed church. The views and projects of this great man were grand and extensive. For he not only undertook to give strength and vigour to the rising church, by framing the wifest laws and the most salutary institutions for the maintenance of order, and the advancement of true piety, but even proposed to render Gevena the mother, the seminary of all the reformed churches, as Wittenberg was of all the Lutheran communities. He formed the scheme of fending forth from this little republic the fuccours and ministers that were to promote and propagate the protestant cause through the most distant nations, and aimed at nothing less than rendering the government, discipline, and doctrine of Geneva, the model and rule of imitation to the reformed churches throughout the world. The undertaking was certainly great, and worthy of the extensive genius and capacity of this eminent man; and, great and arduous as it was, it was executed in part, and even carried on to a very considerable

A A 4

[o] Calvin, in reality, enjoyed the power and authority of a bishop at Geneva; for, as long as he lived, he presided in the assembly of the clergy, and in the consistory, or ecclesiastical judicatory. But when he was at the point of death, he advised the clergy not to appoint a successor, and proved to them evidently the dangerous consequences of entrusting with any one man, during life, a place of such high authority. After him, therefore, the place of president ceased to be perpetual. See Spon's Histoirs de Geneve, tome ii. p. 111.

considerable length, by his indefatigable assiduity and inextinguishable zeal. It was with this view, that, by the fame of his learning, as well as by his epistolary solicitations and encouragements of various kinds, he engaged many persons of rank and fortune, in France, Italy, and other countries, to leave the places of their nativity, and to settle at Geneva; while others repaired thither merely out of curiosity to see a man, whose talents and exploits had rendered him so famous, and to hear the discourses which he delivered in public. Another circumstance, that contributed much to the success of his designs, was the establishment of an university at Geneva, which the senate of that city founded at his request; and in which he himself, with his colleague, Theodore Beza, and other divines of eminent learning and abilities, taught the sciences with the greatest reputation. In effect, the lustre which these great men reflected upon this infant seminary of learning, spread its fame through the distant nations with fuch amazing rapidity, that all who were ambitious of a distinguished progress in either sacred or profane erudition, repaired to Geneva, and that England, Scotland, France, Italy, and Germany, seemed to vie with each other in the numbers of their studious youth, that were incessantly repairing to the new university. By these means, and by the ministry of these his disciples, Calvin enlarged confiderably the borders of the reformed church, propagated his doctrine, and gained profelytes and patrons to his theological system, in several countries of Europe. In the midst of this glorious career, he ended his days, in the year 1564; but the falutary institutions and wise regulations, of which he had been the author, were both respected and maintained after his death. In a more especial manner, the university of Geneva flourished flourished as much under Beza, as it had done

during the life of its founder  $\lceil p \rceil$ .

XIL. The plan of doctrine and discipline that had been formed by Zuingle, was altered and corrected by Calvin, more especially in three points, doctrine and of which it will not be improper to give a particular account.

1st, Zuingle, in his form of ecclesiastical government, had given an absolute and unbounded power, in religious matters, to the civil magistrate, to whom he had placed the clergy in a degree of subjection that was displeasing to many. At the same time he allowed a certain subordination and difference of rank among the ministers of the church, and even thought it expedient to place at their head a perpetual president, or superintendant, with a certain degree of inspection and authority over the whole body. Calvin, on the contrary, reduced the power of the magistrate, in religious matters, within narrow bounds. He declared the church a separate and independent body, endowed with the power of legislation for itself. He maintained, that it was to be governed, like the primitive church, only by presbyteries and synods, that is, by assemblies of elders, composed both of the clergy and laity; and he left to the civil magistrate little more than the privilege of proteching and defending the church, and providing for what related to its external exigencies and

[ ] The various projects and plans that were formed, conducted, and executed with equal prudence and resolution by Calvin, in behalf, both of the republic and church of Geneva, are related by the learned person, who, in the year 1730, gave a new edition (enriched with interesting historical notes, and authentic documents) of Spon's Histoire de Geneve. The particular accounts of Calvin's transactions, given by this anonymous editor, in his notes, are drawn from several curious. manuscripts of undoubted credit. See Spon's Histoire de Geneve, tome ii. p. 87. 100, &c.

concerns,

CENT. 3 B C T. 111. The form of eccleliastical government diswn up hy this Re-

Thus this eminent reformer introduced concerns. into the republic of Geneva, and endeavoured to introduce into all the reformed churches throughout Europe, that form of ecclesiastical government, which is called Presbyterian, from its neither admitting the institution of bishops, nor any fubordination among the clergy; and which is founded on this principle, that all ministers of the gospel are, by the law of God, declared to be equal in rank and authority. In consequence of this principle, he established at Geneva a confistory composed of ruling elders, partly pasters, and partly laymen, and invested this ecclesiastical body with a high degree of power and authority. He also convened synods, composed of the ruling elders of different churches, and in these consistories and fynods had laws enacted for the regulation of all matters of a religious nature; and, among other things, restored to its former vigour the ancient practice of excommunication. All these things were done with the consent of the greatest part of the senate of Geneva.

2dly, The system that Zuingle had adopted with respect to the eucharist, was by no means agreeable to Calvin, who, in order to facilitate the defired union with the Lutheran church, substituted in its place another, which appeared more conformable to the doctrine of that church, and, in reality, differed little from it. For while the doctrine of Zuingle supposed only a symbolical, or sigurative presence of the body and blood of Christ in the eucharist, and represented a pious remembrance of Christ's death, and of the benefits it procured to mankind, as the only fruits that arose from the celebration of the Lord's supper, Calvin explained this critical point in a quite different manner. He acknowledged a real, though spiritual presence of Christ in this sacrament; or, in other words, he maintained, that true

nance with a lively faith, were, in a certain manner, united to the man Christ; and that from this union the spiritual life derived new vigour in the soul, and was still carried on, in a progressive motion, to greater degrees of purity and perfection. This kind of language had been used in the forms of doctrine drawn up by Luther; and as Calvin observed, among other things, that the divine grace was conferred upon sinners, and sealed to them by the celebration of the Lord's support, this induced many to suppose that he adopted the sentiment implied in the barbarous term impanation [q], and did not essentially alter the doctrine of the Lutheran church on this important subject [r]. Be that as it may, his sentiments differed considerably from those of Zuingle; for, while the latter asserted, that all Christians, whether regenerate or unregenerate, might be partakers of the body and blood of Christ, Calvin confined this privilege to the pious and regenerate believer alone.

[q] The term Impanation (which fignifies here the presence of Christ's body in the eucharist, in, or with the bread that is there exhibited) amounts to what is called Confub. stantiation. It was a modification of the monstrous doctrine of Transubstantiation, first invented by some of the disciples of Berenger, who had not a mind to break all measures with the church of Rome, and was afterwards adopted by Luther and his followers, who, in reality, made fad work of it. in order to give it some faint air of possibility, and to maintain it as well as they could, they fell into a wretched scholastic jargon about the nature of substances, subsistences, attributes, properties, and accidents, that did infinite mischief to the true and sublime science of gospel theology, whose beau-tiful simplicity it was adapted to destroy. The very same perplexity and darkness, the same quibbling, sophistical, and unintelligible logic that reigned in the attempts of the Roman catholics to defend the doctrine of Transubstantiation, were visible in the controversial writings of the Lutherans in behalf of Consubstantiation, or impanation. The latter had, indeed, one absurdity less to maintain; but being obliged to asfert, in opposition to intuitive evidence and unchangeable truth, that the same body can be in many places at the same time, they were consequently obliged to have recourse to the darkest and most intricate jargon of the schools, to hide the nonsense of this unaccountable doctrine. The modern Lutherans are grown somewhat wiser in this respect; at least, they seem less zealous than their ancestors about the tenet in question.

3dly, The absolute decree of God, with respect to the future and everlasting condition of the human race, which made no part of the theology of Zuingle, was an essential tenet in the creed of Calvin, who inculcated with zeal the following doctrine: "That God, in predestinating, from all etermity, one part of mankind to everlasting happing ness, and another to endless misery, was led to make this distinction by no other motive than his own good pleasure and free will."

XIII. The first point was of such a nature, that, great as the credit and influence of Calvin were, he

Thefs changes smade by Calvin are not approved or received by all thereformed chusches.

[r] See Fuellini Centur. I. Epifol. Theolog. Reformation. i. p. 255. 262.—Lettres de Calvin à Monf. de Falaise, p. 84.—We learn from Fuellin that Calvin wrote to Bucer a letter, intimating that he approved his sentiments. It is possible, that he may have derived from Bucer the opinion he entertained with respect to the eucharik.—See Bossuet's Histoire des Variations des Eglises Protosantes, tome ii. p. 8. 14. 19.—Courayer's Examen des Defauts des Theologiens, tome ii. p. 72. These two writers pretend that the sentiments of Calvin, with respect to the eucharist, were almost the same with those of the catholics. The truth of the matter is, that the obscurity and inconfishency with which this great man expressed himself upon that subject, render it extremely difficult to give a clear and accurate account of his doctrine.

How it could come into the heads of such men as Bossue and Dr. Courayer to say, that "the sentiments of Calvin concerning the euchasis were almost the same with those of the catholics," is, indeed, strange enough. The doctrine of transubstantiation was to Calvin an unvincible obstacle to any fort of conformity between him and Rome on that subject; for, however obscure and figurative his expressions with respect to Christ's spiritual presence in the eucharist may have been, he never once dreamed of any thing like a corporal presence in that holy savament.

could

could not procure an universal reception for it in CENT. the reformed churches. The English and Germans XVI. rejected it, and even the Swiss refused to adopt it. It was, however, received by the reformed churches in France, Holland, and Scotland. The Swifs remained firm in their opposition; they would not fuffer the form of ecclesiastical government, that had once been established under the inspection of Zuingle, to be changed in any respect, nor the power of the civil magistrate, in religious matters, to receive the smallest prejudice. The other two points were long debated, even in Switzerland, with the greatest warmth. Several churches, more especially those of Zurich and Bern, maintained obstinately the doctrine of Zuingle concerning the eucharist [s]; neither could they be easily persuaded to admit, as an article of faith, the doctrine of predestination, as it had been taught by Calvin [t]. The prudence, however, of this great man, seconded by his resolute perseverance and his extraordinary credit, triumphed at length so far, as to bring about an union between the Swiss churches and that of Geneva, first in relation to the doctrine of the eucharist [u], and afterwards also on the subject of predestination [w]. The followers of Calvin extended still farther the triumphs of their chief, and improved with fuch fuccess the footing he had gained, that, in process of time, almost all the reformed churches adopted his theological

[s] See Fuellini Centur. Epiflolar. p. 264.—Museum Helvettom. i. p. 490. tom. v. p. 479. 483. tom. ii. p. 79.

<sup>[1]</sup> Besides Ruchat and Hottinger, see Museum Helveticum. tom. ii. p. 105. 117 .- Gerdes, Miscellan. Groningens. Nova, tom. n. p. 476.

[#] This agreement was concluded in 1549, for one point, and in 1554 for the other.

[w] See the Consensus Genev. et Tigurinor, in Calvini Opusratis, p. 754.

The progress of Calvin's system in Germany;

fystem; a result to which, no doubt, his learned writings greatly contributed [x].

XIV. It will not be improper to pass in review the different countries in which the doctrine and discipline of the reformed church, as modeled by Calvin, were established in a fixed and permanent manner. Among its chief patrons in Germany we may reckon Frederick III. elector Palatine, who, in the year 1560, removed from their pastoral functions the Lutheran doctors, and filled their places with Calvinists; and, at the same time, obliged his subjects to embrace the tenets, rites, and institutions of the church of Geneva [y]. This order was indeed abrogated, in the year 1576, by his fon and successor Louis, who restored Lutheranism to its former credit and authority. The effects of this revolution were, however, but transitory; for in the year 1583, under the government of the elector John Cafimir, who had followed the example of his brother Frederick in embracing the discipline of the reformed church, the face of things was again changed in favour of Calvinism, which resumed what it had lost, and became triumphant [z]. From this period the church of the Palatinate obtained the fecond place among the reformed churches;

[x] The learned Dan. Ern. Jablonsky, in his Letters to Leibnitz, published by Kappius, maintains (p. 24.41), that the opinion of Zuingle has no longer any patrons among the Reformed. But this is a palpable mistake: for its patrons and defenders are, on the contrary, extremely numerous; and at this very time the doctrine of Zuingle is received in England, Switzerland, and other countries, and seems to acquire new degrees of credit from day to day.

Monum. Palet. tom. i. p. 223.—Loscheri Historia Metuna, part II. lib. iv. cap. iv. p. 125.—Salig, Hist. Confession. Aug. tom. iii. lib. ix. cap. v. p. 433.

[z] Alting. hc. cit.—Loscherus, ibid. part III. lib. vi. p. 324.—See also a German work, by Gotth. Struvius, entitled, Pfaclzische Kirchen Historie, p. 110.

churches; and its influence and reputation were so considerable, that the Form of Instruction, which section. was composed for its use by Ursinus, and which is known under the title of the Catechism of Heidelberg, was almost universally adopted by the Calvinists [a]. The republic of Bremen embraced, also, the same doctrine and institutions. Albert Hardenberg, the intimate friend of Melancthon, was the first who attempted to introduce there the doctrine of Calvin concerning the eucharist. This attempt he made so early as the year 1556; and, though a powerful opposition rendered it at that time unsucessful, and procured the expulsion of its author from the city of Bremen, yet the latent feeds of Calvinism took root, and, towards the conclusion of this century, acquired such strength, that no measures either of prudence or force were sufficient to prevent the church of Bremen from regulating its faith, worship, and government, by that of Geneva [b]. The various motives that engaged other German states to adopt by degrees the same sentiments, and the incidents and circumstances that favoured the progress of Calvinism in the empire, must be sought in those writers, who have undertaken to give an ample and complete history of the Christian church.

XV. Those among the French, who first renoun- and to ced the jurisdiction and doctrine of the church France. of Rome, are commonly called Lutherans by the writers of these early times. This denomination, joined to other circumstances, induced some to imagine, that these French converts to the protestant

[a] For an account of the catechilm of Heidelberg, see Kocheri Bibliotheca Theologia Symbolica, p. 593 and 308.

[b] Salig, loc. cit. part. III. lib. x. cap. v. p. 715. cap. vi. p. 776.—Loscherus, loc. cit. part II. lib. iv. cap. v. p. 134, part III. lib. vi. cap. vii. p. 276 .- Gerdes, Historia Renovati Evangelii, tom. iii. p. 157.

protestant cause were attached to the tenets of the Lutheran church, and averse to those of the Swis doctors [c]. But this is by no means a just representation of the matter. It appears much more probable, that the first French protestants were uniform in nothing but their antipathy to the church of Rome, and that this point being excepted, there was a great variety in their religious sentiments. It is, however, to be observed, that the vicinity of Geneva, Lausanne, and other cities which had adopted the doctrine of Calvin, together with the incredible zeal of this eminent man, and his two colleagues Farel and Beza, in nourishing the opposition to the church of Rame, and augmenting both the indignation and number of its enemies, produced a very remarkable effect upon the French churches; for, before the middle of this century, they all entered into the bonds of fraternal communion with the church of Geneva. The French protestants were called by their enemies Huguenots, by way of derision and contempt; the origin, however, of this denomination is extremely uncertain [d]. Their

[e] Loscheri Historia Motuum, part 11. cap. vi. p. 46.—Stlig, Hist. Aug. Confessionis. tom. ii. lib. v. cap. vi. p. 190.

(c) [d] Some etymologists suppose this term derived from Huguen, a word used in Touraine, to signify persons that walk at eight in the fireets. And as the first Protestants, like the first Christians, may have chosen that season for their religious affemblies, through the fear of persecution, the nickname of buguenot may, naturally enough, have been applied to them by their enemies. Others are of opinion, that it was derived from a French and faulty pronunciation of the German word eidgnoffen, which signisies confederates, and had been originally the name of that valiant part of the city of Geneva which entered into an alliance with the Swifs cantons. in order to maintain their liberties against the tyrannical attempts of Charles III. duke of Savoy. These confederates were called egnotes; and thence, very probably, was derived the word buguenot, now under confideration. comi

Their fate was severe; the storms of persecution affailed them with unparalleled fury; and, though sacr. un. many princes of the royal blood, and the flower PART II. of the nobility, adopted their sentiments, and stood forth in their cause [e], no other part of the reformed church suffered so grievously as they did for the sake of religion. Even the peace, which they obtained from Henry III. in the year 1576, was the fource of that civil war, in which the powerful and ambitious house of Guise, instigated by the fanguinary suggestions of the Roman pontiffs, aimed at nothing less than the extirpation of the royal family, and the utter ruin of the protestant religion; while the Huguenots, on the other hand, headed by leaders of the most heroic valour and the most illustrious rank, combated for their religion and for their sovereigns with various succefs. These dreadful commotions, in which both the contending parties committed such deeds as are yet (and always will be) remembered with horror, were at length calmed by the fortitude and prudence of Henry IV. This monarch, indeed, facrificed the dictates of conscience to the suggestions of policy; and imagining, that his government could have no stable or solid foundation, as long as he persisted in disowning the authority and jurisdiction of Rome, he renounced the reformed from the province of Languedoc, where he was lieutenantgeneral, and dated the 11th of November, 1560, calls the riotous Calvinists of the Cevennes, Huguenots; and this is the first time that the term is found in the registers of that province, applied to the protestants.

[e] See the Histoire Eccles. des Eglises Resormées au Royaums de France, published at Antwerp in three volumes 8vo. in the year 1580, and supposed by many to have been written by Beza. The writers that have given the best accounts of the French resormed churches, their confession of saith, and their forms of worship and discipline, are enumerated by Kocher, in his Pillial Theorem Compassion.

in his Biblioth. Theolog. Symbolica, p. 299.
VOL. IV.

BB

religion,

History of the Reformed Church.

**~ •• •.

CEST

Att.

iga is a Ministrata A signa.

XVII. The origin of these unhappy dissensions, which it has not yet been possible entirely to heal, must be sought in the conduct of those persecuted tugitives, who, to save their lives, their families, and their fortunes, from the sanguinary rage and inhuman tyranny of queen Mary, lest their native country in the year 1554, and took refuge in Germany [k]. Of these sugitive congregations some [k] I cannot help mentioning the uncharitablenels of the Lutherans, upon this occasion, who hated these unhappy exiles because they were Sucramentarians (for so the Lutherans called those who denied Christ's bodily presence in the eacharift), and expelled from their cities such of the English protestants as repaired to them, as a refuge from popish superstition and perfecution. Such as fought an asylum in France, Geneva, and those parts of Switzerland and Germany where the Reformation had taken place, and where Lutheranism was not professed, were received with great humanity, and allowed to have places of public worship. But it was at Frankfort that the exiles were most numerous; and there began the contest and division which gave rise to that separation from the church of England, which continues to this day. It is, however, a piece of justice due to the memory of the excellent Melancthon, to observe, that he warmly condemned this unchantable treatment, and more especially the indecent reproaches which the Lutherans cast upon the English martyrs who had sealed the Reformation, whom they called the Devil's martyrs. "Vociferantur quidam, (says this amiable resormer,) Martyres Anglicos esse Martyres Diaboli. Nolim hac contumelia afficere sanctum spiritum in Latimero, qui annum octogesimum egresses fuit, et in aliis sanctis viris, quos novi." These are the words of this truly Christian reformer, in one of his letters to Camerarius, Epit. lib. iv. p. 959; and in another of his letters, speaking of the burning of Burgius at Paris, he thus severely censures Westphal's intolerant principles: "Tales vivos ait Westphalus esse Diaboli Martyres. Hanc judicii perversitatem quis non detestetur?" Ep. lib. ii. p. 387. Such were the human and liberal sentiments of Melancthon, which have rendered his name so precious to the lovers of piety, probity, and moderation; while the zealots of his own church have treated his memory with obloquy, and compoled differentions de ladiferentifmo Med and bonis. N.

per-

performed divine worship with the rites that had been authorised by Edward VI.; while others preferred the Swiss method of worship as more recommendable on account of its purity and simplicity. The former were called Conformists, on account of their compliance with the ecclesiastical laws enacted by that prince; and the denominations of Nonconformists and Puritans were given to the latter, from their infilting upon a form of worship, more exempt from superstition, and of a more pure kind, than the liturgy of Edward seemed to them to be. These denominations became permanent marks of distinction, which still continue to denote the different religious communities that divide the British nation. The controversy concerning the ceremonial part of divine worship that had divided the exiles abroad, changed scenes, and was removed with them to England, when the auspicious accession of Elizabeth to the throne permitted them to return to their native country. The hopes of enjoying liberty, and of promoting their respective systems, encreased their contests instead of diminishing them; and the breach widened to such a degree, that the most sagacious and provident observers of things seemed to despair of seeing it healed. The wife queen, in her design to accomplish the reformation of the church, was fully resolved not to confine herself to the model exhibited by the protestants of Geneva, and by their adherents the Puritans; and, therefore, she recommended to the attention and imitation of the doctors, that were employed in this weighty and important matter, the practice and institutions of the primitive ages [1]. When her plan was put in execution,

[1] Dr. Mosheim seems disposed, by this ambiguous expression of the primitive ages, to infinuate that queen Elizabeth had formed a pure, rational, and evangelical plan of religious B B 3

cution, and the face of the church was changed szer. m. and reformed by new rules of discipline, and purer forms of public worthip, the famous Act of Uniformity was iffued forth, by which all her fubjects were commanded to observe these rules, and to submit to the reformation of the church on the footing on which it was now placed by the queen, as its supreme visible head upon earth. The Prritans refused their affent to these proceedings; pleaded the dictates of their consciences in behalf of this refusal; and complained heavily, that the gross superstitions of popery, which they had looked upon as abrogated and abolished, were now revived, and even imposed by authority. They were not indeed all equally exasperated against the new constitution of the church; nor did they in effect carry their opposition to equal degrees of excess. The more violent demanded the total abrogation of all that had been done towards the establishment of a national religion, and required nothing less than that the church of England should be exactly modeled after that of Geneva. The milder > religious discipline and worship. It is however certain, that, instead of being willing to strip religion of the ceremonies which remained in it, she was rather inclined to bring the public worship still nearer the Romish ritual *, and had a great propentity to several usages in the church of Rome, which were juftly looked upon as superstitious. She thanked publicly one of her chaplains, who had preached in defence of the real presence; she was fond of images, and retained some in her private chapel: and would undoubtedly have forbidden the marriage of the clergy, if Cecil, her fecretary, had not interposed †. Having appointed a committee of divines to review king Edward's littingy, she gave them an order to firike out all offensive passages against the pope, and to make people easy about the corporal presence of Christ in the sacrement 1.

• Heylin, p. 124.

+ Strype's Life of Parker, p. 107.

<sup>2</sup> Newl's Hist. of the Puritans, vol. i. p. 188.

and more moderate puritans were much more CENT. equitable in their demands, and only defired liberty of conscience, with the privilege of celebrating divine worship in their own way. The queen did not judge it proper to grant to either the object of their requests; but, rather intent upon the suppression of this troublesome sect (as she called it), permitted its enemies to employ for that purpose all the resources of artifice, and all the severity of the laws. Thus was that form of religion established in Britain, which separated the English equally from the church of Rome, on the one hand, and from the other churches that had renounced popery on the other: but which, at the same time, laid a perpetual foundation for dissensions and feuds, in that otherwise happy and prosperous nation  $\lceil m \rceil$ .

XVIII. The incident that gave rise to these un- The sentihappy divisions, which were productive of so many doctrine of and fuch dreadful calamities, was a matter of very the Puritans. fmall moment, that did not feem to affect, in any way, the interests of true religion and virtue. The chief leaders among the puritans entertained a strong aversion to the vestments worn by the English

[m] No writer has treated this part of the ecclefiastical history of Britain in a more ample and elegant manner than Daniel Neal, in his History of the Puritans, or Protestant Nonconformists. The first part of this laborious work was published at London, in the year 1732, and the latter part in 1738. The author, who was himself a non-conformist, has not indeed been able to impose silence so far on the warm and impetuous spirit of party, as not to discover a certain degree of partiality in favour of his brethren: for, while he relates, in the most circumstantial manner, all the injuries the puritans received from the bishops, and those of the established religion, he in many places diminishes, excuses, or suppresses, the faults and failings of these separatists. See also, for an account of the religious history of these times, Strype's Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury under queen Elizabeth, viz. Parker, Grindal, and Whitgift.

clergy

CENT. clergy in the celebration of divine worship. these habits had been used in the times of popery, PART II. and seemed to renew the impressions that had been made upon the people by the Romish priests, they appeared to the puritans in no other light than 28 the enfigns of Antichrist. The spirit of opposition being once set on foot, proceeded, in its remonstrances, to matters of superior moment. The form of ecclesiastical government, established in England, was one of the first and main grievances of which the puritans complained. They looked upon this form as quite different from that which had been instituted by Christ, the great lawgiver of the church; and, in conformity with the fentiments of Calvin, maintained, that, by the divine law, all the ministers of the gospel were absolutely equal in point of rank and authority. They did not indeed think it unlawful, that a person distinguished by the title of bishop, or superintendant, should preside in the assembly of the clergy, for the fake of maintaining order and decency in their method of proceeding; but they deemed it in-congruous and abfurd, that the persons invested with this character should be ranked, as the bishops had hitherto been, among the nobility of the kingdom, employed in civil and political affairs, and distinguished so eminently by their worldly opulence and power. This controverfy was not carried on, however, with excessive animosity and zeal, as long as the English bishops pretended to derive their dignity and authority from no other fource than the laws of their country, and pleaded a right, purely human, to the rank they held in church and state. But the flame broke out with redoubled fury in the year 1588, when Bancroft, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, ventured to assert, that the episcopal order was superior to the body of presbyters, not in consequence of any human institution,

SECT. III.

CENT.

titution, but by the express appointment of God timself [n]. This doctrine was readily adopted by many; and the consequences that seemed naturally to flow from it in favour of episcopal ordination, happened in effect, and gave new suel to the slame of controversy. For they who embraced the sentiments of Bancrost, considered all ministers of the gospel, who had not received ordination from a bishop, as not properly invested with the sacred character; and also maintained that the clergy, in those countries where there were no bishops, were destitute of the gists and qualifications that were necessary to the exercise of the pastoral office, and were to be deemed inferior to the Roman catholic priests.

whose complaints, however, were not confined to the objects already mentioned. There were many circumstances that entered into their plan of reformation. They had a singular antipathy against cathedral churches, and demanded the abolition of the archdeacons, deans, canons, and other officials, that are supported by their lands and revenues. They disapproved the pompous manner of worship that is generally observed in these churches, and looked, particularly, upon instrumental music, as improperly employed in the service of God. The severity of their zeal was also very great; for they were of opinion, that not only open profligates, but even persons whose piety was dubious, deserved to be excluded from the communion of the church [o]; and they endeavoured to justify the rigour of this decision, by observing, that the church being the congregation of the faithful, nothing was more incumbent on its ministers and rulers, than to guard against its being defiled by the presence of persons destitute of true faith and piety. They found, moreover, much subject of affliction and complaint in the rites and ceremonies that were imposed by the queen's order, and by the authority of her council [p]. Among these were the festivals

[n] See Strype's Life and Alls of John Whitgift, archifted of Cauterbury, p. 12th The first English reformers admitted but two orders of church officers to be of divine appointment, viz. bishops and deacons; a presbyter and a bishop, according to them, being merely two names for the same office; but Dr. Bancrost, in a sermon preached at Paul's eross (January 12, 1588), maintained, that the bishops of England were a distinct order from priess, and had superiority ever them jure diving.

[0] The puritans justified themselves in relation to this point, in a letter addressed from their prison to queen Elizabeth, in the year 1592, by observing, that their sentiments concerning the persons subject to excommunication, and also concerning the effects and extent of that act of church discipline, were conformable to those of all the reformed churches, and to the doctrine and practice of the church of England in particular. They declared more especially, that, according to their sense of things, the censure of excommunication deprived only of spiritual privileges and comforts, without taking away either liberty, goods, lands, government private or public, or any other civil or earthly commodity of this life; and thus they distinguished themselves from those surious and fanatical anabaptists, who had committed such disorders in Germany, and some of whom were now making a noise in England.

[p] By this council our author means, the High Commission court, of which it is proper to give some account, as its proceedings effentially belong to the ecclesiatical history of England. This court took its rife from a remarkable classe in the act of supremacy, by which the queen and her successors were empowered to choose persons " to exercise, under her; all manner of jurisdiction, privileges, and pre-eminences, touching any spiritual or ecclesiastical jurisdiction within the realms of England and Ireland, as also to visit, reform, redress, order, correct and amend, all errors, herefics, schisms, abuses, costempts, offences and enormities what soever: provided that they have no power to determine any thing to be herefy, but what has been adjudged to be so by the authority of the canonical scripture, or by the first four general councils, or any of them; or by any other general council, wherein the same was declared herely by the express and plain words of canonical scripture, or such as shall hereafter be declared to be herefy by the high court or bolydays that were celebrated in honour of the saints, the use of the sign of the cross, more especially in the sacrament of baptism, the nomination of part 11. godfathers and godmothers as sureties for the education of children, whose parents were still living [q], and the doctrine relating to the validity of lay-baptism [r]. They disliked the reading of court of parliament, with the affent of the clergy in convocation." Upon the authority of this clause, the queen appointed a certain number of commissioners for ecclesiastical causes, who, in many instances, abused their power. The court they composed, was called the Court of High Commission, because it claimed a more extensive jurisdiction, and higher powers, than the ordinary courts of the bishops. Its jurisdiction reached over the whole kingdom, and was much the same with that which had been lodged in the single person of lord Cromwell, vicar-general of Henry VIII. These commiffioners were empowered to make inquiry, not only by the legal methods of juries, and witnesses, but by all other ways and means which they could devise, that is, by rack, torture, inquisition, and imprisonment. They were invested with a right to examine such persons as they suspected, by administering to them an oath (not allowed in their commission, and therefore called ex officio), by which they were required to answer all questions, and thereby might be obliged to accuse themselves or their most intimate friends. The fines they imposed were merely discretionary; the imprisonment to which they condemned was limited by no rule but their own pleafure; they imposed, when they thought proper, new articles of faith on the clergy, and practised all the iniquities and cruckies of a real inquisition. See Rapin's and Hume's Histories of England, and Neal's History of the Puritans.

CENT.

[q] Other rites and customs displeasing to the puritans, and omitted by our author, were, kneeling at the sacrament of the Lord's supper, bowing at the name of Jesus, giving the ring in marriage, the prohibition of marriage during certain times of the year, and the licensing it for money, as also the confirmation of children by episcopal impesition of hands.

[r] The words of the original are, " nec facris Christisais pueros recens natos ab aliis, quam facerdotibus, initiari patishantur." The Roman catholics, who look upon the external rite of baptism as absolutely necessary to salvation, consequently, allow it to be performed by a layman, or a midwife, where a clergyman is not at hand, or (if such a ridiculous thing may be mentioned) by a furgeon, where a still birth the apocryphal books in the church; and with respect to set forms of prayer, although they did not go so far as to insist upon their being entirely abolished, yet they pleaded for a right to all ministers, of modifying, correcting, and using them in fuch a manner, as might tend most to the advancement of true piety, and of addressing the Deity in such terms as were suggested by their inward feelings, instead of those that were dictated by In a word, they were of opinion, that the government and discipline of the church of England ought to have been modeled after the ecclefialtical laws and institutions of Geneva, and that no indulgence was to be shewn to those ceremonies or practices, which bore the smallest resemblance to the discipline or worship of the church of Rome.

The principles on which the Puritans maintained their fentiments concerning ecclelialtical gwernment and divine worship.

XX. These sentiments, considered in themselves, seemed neither susceptible of a satisfactory desence, nor of a complete resultation. Their solidity or salfehood depended upon the principles from which they were derived; and no regular controversy could be carried on upon these matters, until the contending parties adopted some common and evident principles, by which they might correborate their respective systems. It is only by an examination of these, that it can be known on which side the truth lies, and what degree of utility or importance can be attributed to a contest of this nature. The principles laid down by the Queen's birth is apprehended. The church of England, though k teacheth in general, that none ought to baptize but men dedicated to the service of God, yet doth not esteem null baptise performed by laics or women, because it makes a difference between what is essential to a sacrament, and what is requisite to the regular way of using it. The puritans, that they might neither prescribe, nor even connive at a practice that seemed to be founded on the absolute necessity of infant baptise, would allow that sacred rite to be performed by the clergy alone.

Chap. IL. The History of the Reformed Church.

commissioners on the one hand, and the Puritans CENT. on the other, were indeed very different.

For, in the first place, the former maintained, PART II. that the right of reformation, that is, the privilege of removing the corruptions, and of correcting the errors that may have been introduced into the doctrine, discipline, or worship of the church, is lodged in the sovereign, or civil magistrate alone; while the latter denied, that the power of the magistrate extended so far, and maintained, that it was rather the business of the clergy to restore religion to its native dignity and lustre. This was the opinion of Calvin, as has been already observed.

Secondly, The queen's commissioners maintained, that the rules of proceeding, in reforming the doctrine or discipline of the church, were not to be derived from the facred writings alone, but also from the writings and decisions of the fathers in the primitive ages. The Puritans, on the contrary, affirmed, that the inspired word of God being the pure and only fountain of wisdom and truth, it was thence alone that the rules and directions were to be drawn, which were to guide the measures of those who undertook to purify the faith, or to rectify the discipline and worship, of the church; and that the ecclefiastical institutions of the early ages, as also the writings of the ancient doctors, were absolutely destitute of all authority.

Thirdly, The commissioners ventured to assert, that the church of Rome was a true church, though corrupt and erroneous in many points of doctrine and government; that the Roman pontiff, though chargeable with temerity and arrogance in assuming to himself the title and jurisdiction of head of the whole church, was, nevertheless, to be esteemed a true and lawful bishop; and, consequently, that the ministers ordained by him were qualified for performing

CENT. forming the pastoral duties. This was a point XVI. which the English bishops thought it ubsolutely necessary to maintain, since they could not other-wise claim the honour of deriving their dignities, in an uninterrupted line of succession, from the apostles. But the Puritans entertained very different notions of this matter; they confidered the Romish hierarchy as a system of political and spiritual tyranny, that had justly forfeited the title and privileges of a true church; they looked upon its pontiff as Antichrist, and its discipline as vain, superstitious, idolatrous, and diametrically opposite to the injunctions of the gospel; and, in consequence of these sentiments, they renounced its communion, and regarded all approaches to its discipline and worship as highly dangerous to the cause of true religion.

Fourthly, The commissioners considered as the best and most perfect form of ecclesiastical government, that which took place during the first four or five centuries; they even preferred it to that which had been instituted by the apostles, because, as they alleged, our Saviour and his apostles had accommodated the form, mentioned in Scripture; to the feeble and infant state of the church, and left it to the wisdom and discretion of future ages to modify it in such a manner as might be suitable to the triumphant progress of Christianity, the grandeur of a national establishment, and also to the ends of civil policy. The Puritans afferted, in opposition to this, that the rules of church government were clearly laid down in the Scriptures, the only standard of spiritual discipline [s]; and at the apostles, in establishing the first Christian nurch on the aristocratical plan that was then obtaved in the Jewish Sanhedrim, designed it as an achangeable model, to be followed in all times, and in all places.

[s] By this they meant, at least, that nothing should be imposed as necessary, but what was expressly contained in the holy scriptures, or deduced from them by necessary consequence. They maintained still farther, that supposing it proved, that

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

Lastly, The court reformers were of opinion, that ings indifferent, which are neither commanded or forbidden by the authority of Scripture, such s the external rites of public worship, the kind of estments that are to be used by the clergy, reliious festivals, and the like, might be ordered, deermined, and rendered a matter of obligation by he authority of the civil magistrate; and that, in ach a case, the violation of his commands would e no less criminal than an act of rebellion against he laws of the state. The puritans alleged, in nswer to this affertion, that it was an indecent rostitution of power to impose, as necessary and ndispensable, those things which Christ had left in he class of matters indifferent, since this was a nanifest encroachment upon that liberty with which he divine Saviour had indulged us. To this hey added, that such rites and ceremonies as had nanifest tendency to revive the impressions of superstition and popery in the minds of men, could by no means be considered as indifferent, but delerved to be rejected without hesitation as impious und profane. Such, in their estimation, were the religious ceremonies of ancient times, whose abrogation was refused by the queen and her coun- $\operatorname{cil}[t].$

XXI. This

all things necessary to the good government of the church could not be deduced from holy scripture, yet the discretionary power of supplying this defect was not vested in the civil magistrate, but in the spiritual officers of the church.

[t] Dr. Mosheim, in these five articles, has followed the account of this controversy given by Mr. Neal, in his History

CENT. XVI. SECT. III.

XXI. This contest between the commissioners of the court, and those religionists who desired a more complete reformation than had yet taken place, would have been much more dangerous in The Brown- its consequences, had the party, distinguished by the Puritans, the general denomination of Puritans, been united in their fentiments, views, and measures. case was quite otherwise. For this large body, composed of persons of different ranks, characters, opinions, and intentions, and unanimous in nothing but their antipathy to the forms of doctrine and discipline that were established by law, was suddenly divided into a variety of sects; of which some spread abroad the delusions of enthusiasm, which had turned their own brains; while others displayed their folly in inventing new and whimfical plans of church-government. Of all these sects the most famous was that which was formed, about the year 1581, by Robert Brown, an infinuating man, but very unsettled and inconsistent in his views and notions of things. This innovator did not greatly differ, in point of doctrine, either from the church of England, or from the rest of the Puritans; but he had formed fingular notions concerning the nature of the church, and the rules > of the Puritans. This writer adds a fixth article, not of debate, but of union. "Both parties (says he) agreed too well in afferting the necessity of an uniformity of public worship, and of calling in the sword of the magistrate for the support and defence of their several principles, which they made an ill use of in their turns, as they could grasp the power into their bands. The standard of uniformity, according to the bishops, was the queen's supremacy, and the laws of the land; according to the puritans, the decrees of provincial and national synods, allowed and enforced by the civil magistrate: but neither party were for admitting that liberty of conscience, and freedom of profession, which is every man's right, as far as is consistent with the peace of the government under which he lives."

of ecclesiastical government. He was for dividing the whole body of the faithful into separate focieties or congregations, not larger than those which were formed by the apostles in the infance of Christianity; and maintained, that such a number of persons, as could be contained in an ordinary place of worship, ought to be considered as a church, and enjoy all the rights and privileges that are competent to an ecclesiastical community. These small societies he pronounced independent, jure divino, and entirely exempt from the jurifdiction of the bishops, in whose hands the court placed the reins of spiritual government; and also from that of fynods, which the puritans in general regarded as the supreme visible sources of ecclesiastical authority. He also maintained, that the power of governing each congregation, and providing for its welfare, resided in the people; and that each member had an equal share in this direction, and an equal right to regulate affairs for the good of the whole fociety [u]. Hence all points both of doctrine and discipline were submitted to the discussion of the whole congregation, and whatever was supported by a majority of votes passed into a law. It was the congregation also that elected some of the brethren to the office of pastors, to perform the duty of public instruction, and the feveral branches of divine worship; reserving, however, the power of dismissing these ministers, [u] It is farther to be observed, that, according to this system, one church was not entitled to exercise jurisdiction over another; but each might give the other counsel or admonition, if its members walked in a disorderly manner, or abandoned the capital truths of religion; and, if the offending church did not receive the admonition, the others were allowed to disown it publicly as a church of Christ. On the other hand, the powers of the church-officers were confined within the narrow limits of their own society. The pastor of a church might not administer the sacrament of baptism, or the Lord's supper, to any but those of his own communion.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III.

and reducing them to the condition of private members, whenever fuch a change should appear to be conducive to the spiritual advantage of the community. For these pastors were not esteemed superior, either in sanctity or rank, to the rest of their brethren, nor distinguished from them by any other circumstance than the liberty of preaching and praying, which they derived from the free will and consent of the congregation. It is, besides, to be observed, that their right of preaching was by no means of an exclusive nature, or peculiar to them alone; since any member that thought proper to exhort or instruct the brethren, was abundantly indulged in the liberty of prophesying to the whole af-sembly. Accordingly, when the ordinary teach-er or pastor had finished his discourse, all the other brethren were permitted to communicate in public their sentiments and illustrations upon any useful or edifying subject, on which they supposed they could throw new light. In a word, Brown endeavoured to model the form of the church after the infant community that was founded by the apostles, without once considering the important changes, both in the religious and civil state of the world, since that time, the influence that these changes must necessarily have upon all ecclesiastical establishments, and the particular circumstances of the Christian church, in consequence of its former corruptions and its late reformation. And, if his notions were crude and chimerical, the zeal with which he and his associates maintained and propagated them was intemperate and extravagant in the highest degree. For he affirmed, that all communion was to be broken off with those religious societies that were founded upon a different plan from his; and treated more especially the church of England as a spurious church, whose ministers unlawfully ordained, whose discipline was h and antichristian, and whose sacraments and utions were destitute of all efficacy and virCENT. XVI. SECT. 11h. PART II.

The sect of this hot-headed innovator, not; able to endure the severe treatment which opposition to the established forms of religious government and worship had drawn upon, from an administration that was not distished by its mildness and indulgence, retirito the Netherlands, and founded churches at dleburg in Zealand, and at Amsterdam and en, in the province of Holland; but their established were neither solid nor durable [x]. It founder returned into England, and, having unced his principles of separation, took orders to established church, and obtained a benefice

The puritan exiles, whom he thus abandoned, reed among themselves, and split into parties; their affairs declined from day to day [z]. This ged the wiser part of them to mitigate the ity of their founder's plan, and to soften the ir of his uncharitable decisions; and hence the community of the Independents, or Contional Brethren; a sect which still subsists, and of

P [y] Brown, in his new preferment, forgot, not only the ir of his principles, but also the gravity of his former morals; e led a very idle and dissolute life. See Neal's History of Puritans, vol. i. p. 376.

which

The British churches at Amsterdam and Middleburg corporated into the national Dutch church, and their passer members of the Dutch synod, which is sufficient to shew there are at this time no traces of Brownism or Indepension these churches. The church at Leyden, where Ronal fixed the standard of independency about the year, was dispersed; and it is very remarkable, that some memorithis church, transplanting themselves into America, laid bundation of the colony of New-England.

Neal's History of the Puritans, vol. i. chap. vi.——rnbeckii Summa Controvers. lib. x. p. 738——Fuller's shastical History of Britain, book x. p. 168.

CENT. which an account shall be given in the history of the following century.

church in the Netherhands,

XXII. In the Belgic provinces, the friends of the Reformation seemed for a long time uncerthe reformed tain, whether they should embrace the communion of the Swifs or that of the Lutheran church. Each of these had zealous friends and powerful patrons [d]. The matter was, nevertheless, decided in the year 1571, and the religious fystem of Calvin was publicly adopted. For the Belgic confession of faith, which then appeared [b], was drawn up in the spirit, and almost in the terms, of that which was received in the reformed churches of France, and differed confiderably, in feveral respects, from the confession of Augsburg, but more especially in the article relating to Christ's presence in the eucharist [c]. This will not appear furprising to those who consider the vicinity of the French to the Low-Countries; the number of French protestants that were constantly passing or fojourning there; the extraordinary reputation of Calvin, and of the college of Geneva; as also, the indefatigable zeal of his disciples in extending the limits of their church, and propagating, throughout Europe, their system of doctrine, discipline, and government. Be that as it may, from this period, the Dutch, who had before been denominated Lutherans, assumed univerfally the title of Reformed, in which also they imitated the French, by whom this title had been first invented and adopted. It is true, that, as long as they were subject to the Spanish yoke, the fear of exposing themselves to the displeasure of their sovereign induced them to avoid the title CENT. of Reformed, and to call themselves Associates of be Brethren of the Confession of Augsburg. For the PART II. Lutherans were esteemed, by the Spanish court, nuch better subjects than the disciples of Calvin, who, on account of the tumults that had lately prevailed in France, were supposed to have a greater propensity to mutiny and sedition [d].

[a] Loscheri Histor. Motuum, p. III. lib. v. cap. iv. p. 74. [b] Kocheri Biblioth. Theolog. Symbolice, p. 216.

[c] See Brandt's History of the Reformation of the Netherlands (written in Dutch), vol. i. book v. p. 253.

XXIII. The light of the Reformation was first and in Poprought from Saxony into Poland by the disciples land. of Luther. Some time after this happy period, he Bohemian Brethren, whom the Romish clergy nad expelled from their country, as also several Helvetic doctors, propagated their fentiments umong the Polanders. Some congregations were also founded in that republic by the Anabapists, Anti-Trinitarians, and other sectaries [e]. Hence it was, that three distinct communities, ach of which adopted the main principles of the Reformation, were to be found in Poland, viz. the Bohemian Brethren, the Lutherans and Swiss. These communities, in order to defend themselves with the greater vigour against their common enenies, formed among themselves a kind of confederacy, in a fynod held at Sendomir in the year 1570, upon certain conditions, which were comprehended in the Confession of Faith, that derives its

[d] Dr. Mosheim advances this on the authority of a passage in Brandt's History of the Reformation of the Netherands, (p. 254.) which is a most curious and valuable work, notwithstanding the author's partiality to the cause of Arminianism, of which he was one of the most respectable patrons.

[e] Loscheri Hist. Motuum, part III. lib. v. cap. iii. p. 36.— Salig, Hist. Aug. Confession. tom. ii. lib. vi. cap. iii, iv, v. p. 516

Regenvolscii Hist. Eccles. Slavonicar. lib. i. cap. xvi. p. 71. -Solignac, Hist. de Pologne, tome v. p. 40. - Kautz, Precipua Relig. Evangel. in Polonia Fata, published in 4to at Hamburgh, in the year 1738.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

this association seemed rather adapted to accelerate the conclusion of peace, than to promote the cause of truth, the points in debate between the Lutherans and the Reformed being expressed in this reconciling confession in vague and ambiguous terms, it was soon after this warmly opposed by many of the former, and was entirely annulled in the following century. Many attempts have, indeed, been made to revive it; but they have not answered the expectations of those who have employed their dexterity and zeal in this matter. In Prussia the Reformed gained ground after the death of Luther and Melancthon, and founded the slourishing churches that still subsist in that country [g].

The Bohemian Brethren. XXIV. The Bohemian, or, as they are otherwise called, Moravian Brethren, who descended from the better sort of Hussites, and were distinguished by several religious institutions of a singular nature, and well adapted to guard their community against the reigning vices and corruptions of the times, had no sooner heard of Luther's design of reforming the church, than they sent deputies, in the year 1522, to recommend themselves to his friendship and good offices. In succeeding times, they continued to discover the saxony, and also to those which were founded in other countries. These offers could not be well accepted without a previous examination of their religious sentiments and principles: and, indeed,

[g] Loscheri Historia Motuum, part III. lib. vi. cap. i. p. 216. this

[f] See Dan. Ernest Jablonsky's Historia Consensus Sendewiriensis, published at Berlin in 4to, in the year 1731; as also the Epistola Apologetica of the same author, in desence of the work now mentioned, against the objections of an anonymous author.

this examination turned to their advantage; for CENT. neither Luther nor his disciples sound any thing, XVI. either in their doctrine or discipline, that was, in PART II. any great measure, liable to censure; and though he could not approve every part of their Confession of Faith, which they submitted to his judgment, yet he looked upon it as an object of toleration and indulgence [b]. Nevertheless, the death of Luther, and the expulsion of these Brethren from their country in the year 1547, gave a new turn to their religious connections; and great numbers of them, more especially of those who retired into Poland, embraced the religious sentiments and discipline of the Reformed. The attachment of the Bohemians to the Lutherans feemed, indeed, to be revived by the Convention of Sendomir, already mentioned; but as the articles of union, that were drawn up in that asfembly, foon lost all their force and authority, the Bohemians, by degrees, entered one and all into the communion of the Swiss church [i]. This union was at first formed on the express condition, that the two churches should continue to be governed by their respective laws and institutions, and should have separate places of public worship; but, in the following century, all remains of dissension were removed in the synods held at Oftrog in the year 1620 and 1627, and the two congregations were formed into one, under the title of The Church of the

[b] See a German work of Carpzovius, entitled, Nachricht von den Bohmischen Brudern, p. 46. as also Jo. Chr. Kecheri Bibliotheca Theologia Symbolica, p. 76.

[i] Besides Comenius, Camerarius, and Lasitius, who have written professedly the history of the Bohemian Brethren, see Loscheri Historia Motuum, part III. lib. v. cap. vi. p. 99.—Salig's Hist. Confession. Aug. tom. ii. lib. vi. cap. iii. p. 529.—Ad. Regenvolicii Hist. Eccles. Sclavonica. lib. i. cap. xiii. xiv. xv.

GENT. United Brethren. In this coalition the reconciled parties shewed to each other reciprocal marks of toleration and indulgence; for the external form of the church was regulated by the discipline of the Bohemian Brethren, and the articles of faith were taken from the creed of the Calvinists [k].

The Waldenics, Sungarians, and Transylrenians.

XXV. The descendants of the Waldenses, who lived shut up in the valleys of Piedmont, were naturally led, by their fituation in the neighbourhood of the French, and of the republic of Geneva, to embrace the doctrines and rites of the Reformed church. So far down, however, as the year 1630, they retained a considerable part of their ancient discipline and tenets; but the plague that broke out in that year having destroyed the greatest part of this unhappy people, and among the rest a considerable number of their pastors and clergy, they addressed themselves to the French churches for spiritual succour; and the new doctors, who were fent in consequence of that invitation, made several changes in the discipline and doctrine of the Waldenses, and rendered them conformable, in every respect, with those of the protestant churches in France [1].

The Hungarians and Transylvanians were engaged to renounce the errors and superstitions of the church of Rome by the writings of Luther, and the ministry of his disciples. But, some time after, Matthias Devay, and other doctors, began to introduce, in a secret manner, among these nations, the doctrines of the Swiss churches in relation to the eucharist, as also their principles of ecclesiastical government. This doctrine and these principles were propagated in a more open and public manner towards the year 1550, by Szegedin and other Calvinist teachers, whose ministry was attended with remarkable success. This change was followed by the same dissensions that had broken out in other countries on like occasions; and these dissensions grew into an open schism among the friends of the Reformation in these provinces, which the lapse of time has rather confirmed than diminished  $\lceil m \rceil$ .

[k] Regenvolscii Hist. lib. i. cap. xiv. p. 120.

<sup>[1]</sup> Leger, Histoire Generale des Eglises Vaudoises, livr, i. thap. xxxiii. p. 205, 206.—Abr. Sculteti Annales Renovati Evangelii, p. 294.—Dan. Gerdes, Hist. Renovati Evangelii, tom. ii. p. 401.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III, PART IS.

XXVI. After the solemn publication of the Of the Lufamous Form of Concord, of which an account has theren churches been already given, many German churches, of that cmthe Lutheran communion, dissolved their original braced Calbonds, and embraced the doctrine and discipline of Calvin. Among these we may place the churches of Nassau, Hanau, and Isenburg, with several others of less note. In the year 1595, the princes of Anhalt, influenced by the counsels of Wolfgang Amling, renounced also the profession of Lutheranism, and introduced into their dominions the religious tenets and rites of Geneva; this revolution, however, produced a long and warm controversy between the Lutherans and the inhabitants of the principality  $\lceil n \rceil$ . The doctrines of the Calvinist or Reformed church, particularly those which relate to the eucharist, were also introduced into Denmark, towards the conclusion of this century; for, in this kingdom, the difciples and votaries of Melancthon, who had always discovered a strong propensity to an union between the protestant churches, were extremely numerous, and they had at their head Nicholas Hemmingius, a man eminent for his piety and learning. But the views of this divine, and the schemes of his party, being discovered much sooner than they expected, by the vigilant defenders of the Lutheran cause, their plans were disconcerted [0], and the progress of Calvinism was fuccessfully opposed by the Lutheran ministers, seconded by the countenance and authority of the fovereign [p].

[m] Pauli Debrezeni Historia Eccles. Reform. in Hungar. et Transylvan. lib. ii. p. 64. 72. 98. Unschuld. Nachricht, A. 1738. p. 1076.—Georg. Haneri Historia Eccles. Transylv. published at Francfort in the year 1694.

[n] See, for an account of this matter, the German work of Bechman, which is thus entitled Historie des Hauses Anhalt, vol. ii. p. 133. and that of Kraft, which bears the title of Ausfubrliche Historie von dem Exorcismo, p. 428. 497. Though the princes professed Calvinism, and introduced Calvinist ministers in all the churches, where they had the right of patronage, yet the people were left free in their choice; and the noblemen and their vassals, that were attached to Lutheranism, had secured to them the unrestrained exercise of their religion. By virtue of a convention made in 1679, the Lutherans were permitted to erect new churches. The Zerbst line, with the greatest part of its subjects, profess Lutheranism; but the three other lines, with their respective territories, are Calvinists.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

The diverfity that reigned among the various branches of the Reformad church. XXVII. It must not, however, be imagined, that the different nations that embraced the communion of the Calvinist church, adopted, at the same time, without exception, all its tenets, rites, and institutions. This universal conformity was, indeed, ardently desired by the Helvetic doctors; but their desires, in this respect, were far from being accomplished. The English, as is sufficiently known, rejected the forms of ecclesiastical government and religious worship that were adopted by the other resormed churches, and could not be persuaded to receive, as public and national articles of faith, the doctrines that were propagated in Switzerland, in relation to the mean no more) the designs, that were formed to render Calvinism the national and established religion, proved abortive. It is certain, however, that Calvinism made a very considerable progress in Denmark, and has still a great number of votaries in that kingdom.

[o] Erici Pontoppidani Annal. Ecclesia Danica Diplomatici,

ient of the Lord's Supper and the divine CENT. s [q]. The protestants in Holland, Bremen, stor. III. 1, Hungary, and the Palatinate, followed, l, the French and Helvetic churches in fentiments concerning the eucharist, in the city of their worship, and in their prinof ecclesiastical polity; but not in their s of predestination, which intricate doctrine left undefined, and submitted to the free nation and private judgment of every indi-[r]. It may farther be affirmed, that, be-

[q] It is true, that the doctrine of Zuingle, who nted the bread and wine as nothing more than the exteris of the death of Christ, was not adopted by the church land; but the doctrine of Calvin was embraced by that , and is plainly taught in the xxviiith article of its faith. what relates to the doctrine of the divine decrees, Dr. m is equally in an error. The xviith article of the church land is, as bishop Burnet candidly acknowleges, framed ng to St. Augustin's doctrine, which scarcely differs at that of Calvin; and though it be expressed with a certude that renders it susceptible of a mitigated interpreyet it is very probable, that those who penned it were of the doctrine of absolute decrees. The very cautions, : subjoined to this article, intimate, that Calvinism was was meant to establish. It is certain, that the Calvinistitrine of predestination prevailed among the first English ers, the greatest part of whom were, at least, Sublapjurithe reign of queen Elizabeth this doctrine was predo-, but after that period it lost ground imperceptibly, and sounced by the church of England in the reign of king Some members of that church still adhered, neverto the tenets of Calvin, and maintained, not only that rty-nine articles were Calvinistical, but also affirmed that rere not susceptible of that latitude of interpretation ich the Arminians contended. These episcopal votaries vinism were called Doarinal Puritans. See Burnet's ion of the Seventeenth Article, &c. and Neal's History of ritans, vol. i. p. 579.

See Grotii Apologet. eorum, qui Hollandie ante nem, A. 1618, prefucrunt, cap. iii. p. 54. Ed. 1640.

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART II. fore the fynod of Dordrecht [s], no reformed church had obliged its members, by any special law or article of faith, to adhere to the doctrine of the church of Geneva relating to the primary causes of the salvation of the elect, or the ruin of the reprobate. It is true, that, in the countries now mentioned, the greatest part of the resormed doctors fell by degrees, of their own accord, into the Calvinistical opinion concerning these intricate points; and this was principally owing, no doubt, to the great reputation of the college of Geneva, which was generally frequented, in this century, by those among the Reformed who were candidates for the ministry.

The doetrine adopted by the Reformed churches. Testament are regarded by the Reformed churches as the only sources of Divine Truth; it must however be observed, that, to their authority, the church of England adds that of the writings of the Fathers during the first five centuries [t]. The Resormed and the Lutherans agree in maintaining that the Holy Scriptures are infallible in all things; that, in matters of which the knowlege is necessary to salvation, they are clear, and complete; and also that they are to be explained

[s] It was in this famous fynod, that was affembled in the year 1618, and of which we shall have occasion to give a more ample account in the history of the following century, that the doctrine of Calvin was fixed as the national and esta-

lished religion of the Seven United Provinces.

church of England, which implies its considering the writings of the Fathers of the first five centuries, as an authoritative criterion of religious truth. There is, indeed, a clause in the As of Uniformity, passed in the reign of queen Elizabeth, declaring that her delegates, in ecclesiastical matters, should not determine any thing to be heresy, but what was adjudged so by the authority of scripture, or by the first four general councils; and this has perhaps misled Dr. Mosheim in the passage to which this note refers. Much respect, indeed (perhaps too much), has been paid to the Fathers; but that has been always a matter of choice, and not of obligation.

by themselves, and not by the dictates of human reason, or the decisions of the ancient Fathers. Several of the doctors among the former have indeed employed too freely the fagacity of their natural understanding, in explaining the divine mysteries that are contained in the Gospel; and this circumstance has induced many to imagine, that the Reformed adopted two sources of religion, two criterions of divine truth, viz. the Holy Scripture and Human Reason. But perhaps it will be found, that, in this respect, doctors of both communions have sometimes gone too far, being led on by the spirit of controversy, and animated with the defire of victory. For, if we except the fingular tenets of some individuals, it may be affirmed with truth, that the Lutherans and the Reformed are unanimous in the matter now under consideration. They both maintain, that contradictory propositions cannot be the objects of faith; and consequently that all doctrines that contain such ideas and notions as are repugnant to, and mutually destroy each other, must be false and incredible. It is true, indeed, that the Reformed sometimes use this principle in a contentious manner, to overturn certain points of the Lutheran system, which they have thought proper to reject  $\lceil u \rceil$ .

XXIX. The Reformed, if by this denomination we understand those who embrace the sentiments of Calvin, differ entirely from the Lutherans in the following points:

1 st, In their notions of the sacrament of the Lord's supper. The Lutherans affirm that the

The points in which the and Lutherans difagree.

[u] Our author has here undoubtedly in view the Lutheran doctrine of Consubstantiation, which supposes the same extended body to be totally present in different places at one and the same time. To call this a gross and glaring contradiction, seems rather the dictate of common sense, than the suggestion. of a contentious spirit.

CENT. body and blood of Christ are materially present in this facrament, though in an incomprehenfible manner; and that they are really exhibited, both to the righteous and the wicked, to the worthy and to the unworthy receiver. The Reformed hold, on the contrary, that the man Christ is only present in this ordinance by the external tigns of bread and wine; though it must, at the same time, be observed, that this matter is differently explained and represented in the writings of their doctors.

> 2dly, In their doctrine of the eternal decrees of God, respecting man's salvation. The Lutherans maintain, that the divine decrees respecting the falvation or misery of men are founded upon a previous knowlege of their sentiments and characters; or, in other words, that God, foreseeing from all eternity the faith or incredulity of different persons, had reserved eternal happiness for the faithful, and eternal misery for the unbelieving and disobedient. The Reformed entertain different fentiments concerning this intricate point. They consider the divine decrees as free and unconditional, and as founded on the will of God, which is limited by no superior order, and which is above all laws.

> 3dly, Concerning some religious rites and institutions, which the Reformed confider as bordering upon superstition, or tending, at least, to promote it; while the Lutherans view them in another light, and represent all of them as tolerable, and some of them as useful. Such are, the use of images in the churches, the distinguishing vestments of the clergy, the private confession of sins, the use of wafers in the administration of the Lord's supper, the form of exorcism in the celebration of baptism, and other ceremonies of like moment. The Reformed doctors insist on the abolition of all these rites and institutions, upon upon this general principle, that the discipline CENT. and worship of the Christian church ought to be XVI. restored to their primitive simplicity, and freed PART II. from the human inventions and additions that were employed by superstition in the times of ignorance, to render them more striking to the deluded multitude.

XXX. The few heads of difference, between the The intwo communions, which have been now briefly portance pointed out, have furnished an inexhaustible fund differences. of controversy to the contending parties, and been drawn out into a multitude of intricate questions, and subjects of debate, that, by consequences, fairly or injudiciously deduced, have widened the scene of contention, and extended to almost all the important truths of religion. Thus the debate concerning the manner in which the body and blood of Christ are present in the eucharist, opened to the disputants a large field of inquiry; in which the nature and fruits of the institutions called facraments, the majesty and glory of Christ's humanity, together with the comquinication of the divine perfections to it, and the inward frame of spirit that is required in the worship addressed to the divine Saviour, were carefully examined. In like manner, the controversy, which had for its object the divine decrees, led the doctors, by whom it was carried on, into the most subtile and profound researches concerning the nature of the divine attributes, particularly those of justice and goodness, the doctrines of fate and necessity, the connection between buman liberty and divine prescience; the extent of God's love to mankind, and of the benefits that arise from the merits of Christ as mediator; the operations of that divine spirit, or power, which rectifies the wills and fanctifies the affections of men; the perseverance of the elect in their covenant with God, and in a state of salvation; and

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

The subject other points of great moment. of debate, that was drawn from the use of external rites and ceremonies in religious worship, was also productive of several questions and enquiries. For, besides the researches into the origin and antiquity of certain institutions to which it gave occasion, it naturally led to a difcussion of the following important questions: viz. "What are the special marks that characterise things indifferent?—How far is it lawful to comply with the demands of an adversary, whose opposition is only directed against things esteemed indifferent in their own nature?—What is the extent of Christian liberty?—Is it lawful retain, in condescension to the prejudices of the people, or with a view to their benefit, certain ancient rites and institutions, which, although they carry a superstitious aspect, may nevertheless be susceptible of a favourable and rational interpretation?

To whom the right of governing the church belongs.

XXXI. It has always been a question much debated among protestants, and more especially in England and Holland, where it has excited great commotions and tumults, to whom the right of governing the church, and the power of deciding in religious matters, properly belong? This controverfy has been determined in favour of those who maintain, that the power of deciding, in matters of religious doctrine, discipline, and government, is, by the appointment of Christ himself, veited in the church, and therefore ought by no means to be intrusted with the civil magistrate; while, at the same time, they grant, that it is the business of the latter to assist the church with his protection and advice, to convoke and preside in its synods and councils, to take care that the clergy do not attempt to carry on any thing that may be prejudicial to the interests of the state, and, by his authority, to confirm the validity, and secure the execution of the ecclesiastical

Chap. II. The History of the Reformed Church.

laws enacted by the church under his inspect CE'N's tion. It is true, that from the time of Henry VIII. the fovereigns of England consider themselves as supreme heads of the church, in relation to its spiritual, as well as its temporal concerns; and it is plain enough, that, on the strength of this important title, both Henry and his son Edward assumed an extensive authority and jurisdiction in the church, and looked upon their spiritual power, as equal to that which hat been unworthily enjoyed by the Roman pontiff [w]. But queen Elizabeth receded considerably from these high pretensions, and diminished the spiritual power of her successors, by declaring that the royal jurisdiction extended only to the ministers of religion, and not to religion itself; to the rulers of the church, and not to the church itself; or, in other words, that the persons of the clergy were alone subject to their civil authority [x]. Accordingly; we see that the constitution of the church of England perfectly resembles that of the state, and that a striking analogy exists between the civil and ecclesiastical government established in that country. The clergy, consisting of the upper and lower houses of convocation, are immediately assembled by the archbishop of Canterbury, in confequence of an order from the fovereign, and propose in these meetings, by common consent, such measures as seem necessary to the well-being of the church. These measures are laid before the king and parliament, and derive from their ap-

[w] See Neal's History of the Puritans, vol. i. p. 11.

VOL. IV.

D D

probation

[x] See Courayer's Supplement aux deux Ouvrages pour la Defense de la Validité des Ordinations Anglicanes, chap. xv. p. 416.

This must be understood with many restrictions, if it can be at all admitted. The whole tenor of queen Elizabeth's reign shewed plainly that she did not pretend to less power in religious matters than any of her predecessors.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. probation and authority the force of laws [7]. But it must be acknowledged, that this matter has given occasion to much altercation and debate; nor has it been found easy to fix the extent of the jurisdiction and prerogatives of these great bodies in a manner conformable to their respective pretensions, since the king and his council explain them in one way, and the clergy, more especially those who are zealous for the spiritual supremacy and independency of the church, understand them in another. The truth of the matter is plainly this, that the ecclesiastical polity in England has never acquired a stable and consistent form; nor has it been reduced to clear and certain principles. It has rather been carried on and administered by ancient custom and precedent, than defined and fixed by any regular system of laws and institutions.

The form of eccleliastical government among the Reformed.

XXXII. If it was not an easy matter to determine in what hands the power of deciding affairs of a religious nature was to be lodged, it was no less difficult to fix the form of ecclesiastical government in which this power was to be administered. Many vehement disputes were kindled on this subject, which neither the lapse of time, nor the efforts of human wisdom, have been able to bring to an amicable issue. The republic of Geneva, in consequence of the counsels of Calvin, judged it proper that the particular affairs of each church should be directed by a body of presbyters, or elders, all invested with an equal degree of power and authority; that matters of a more public and important nature were to be sub-

Disciplina, in the learned Thomas Smith's Vita Eruditiss. Virorum, published at London in 4to, in the year 1707.—See also Dav. Wilkins, de Veteri et Moderna Synodi Anglic. Constitutione, tom. i. Concil. Magn. Britann. p. 7.—Neal's History of the Puritans, vol. i. p. 2. 15. 132.

mitted to the judgment of an affembly, or synod, composed of elders chosen as deputies by the churches of a whole province or district; and that all affairs of such extensive influence and high moment, as concerned the welfare of the sacred community in general, should be examined and decided, as in early times, by an affembly of the whole church. This form of ecclesiastical government the church of Geneva adopted for itself [z], and left no intreaties or methods of perfuafion unemployed, that might recommend it to those reformed churches with which they lived in fraternal communion. But it was obstinately

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART 396

The account Dr. Mosheim gives here and above (sea. XII. of this chapter) of the form of ecclesiastical government established by Calvin at Geneva, is far from being accurate. There are but two ecclesiastical bodies in that republic, viz. the venerable company of the pastors and profesfors, and the confistory; for a just description of which, see the judicious Mr. Keate's 'Short Account of the Ancient History, present Government, and Laws of the Republic of Geneva,' published in 1761.— I would only remark that what this sensible author observes, with respect to the consistory, in p. 124. of his interesting performance, belongs principally, if not wholly, to the venerable company. - Dr. Mosheim seems to have been led into this mistake, by imagining that the ecclesiastical form of government established in Scotland, where indeed all church affairs are managed by confiftorial, provincial, and national assemblies, or, in other words, by presbyteries, synods, and general synods, was a direct transcript of the hierarchy of Geneva. It is also probable, that he may have been deceived by reading, in Neal's History of the Puritans, that the Scotish reformers approved the discipline of the reformed churches of Geneva and Switzerland, and followed their plan of ecclesiastical government. But he ought to have observed, that this approbation and imitation related only to the democratic form of the church of Geneva, and the parity of its ministers. Be that as it may, the plan of government, which our historian here supposes to have place at Geneva, is in reality that which is observed in Scotland, and of which no more than the fift and fundamental principles were taken from the discipline of Calvin. The small territory of Geneva would not admit uch a form of ecclefiastical polity as Dr. Mosheim here lescribes.

CENT. rejected by the English clergy, who regarded sect. in. as facred and immutable that ancient form of spiritual government, according to which a certain district or diocese is committed to the care and inspection of one ruler or bishop, whom the presbyters of each church are subject, as also the deacons are to the presbyters; while the general interests of the church are treated and discussed in an assembly of bishops, and of such ecclesiastics as are next to them in rank and dignity. This form of episcopal polity was, with some small exceptions, adopted by the Bohemian and Moravian brethren [a], who had become one of the reformed churches; but it was highly displeasing to those among the protestants, who had embraced the fentiments and difcipline of Calvin. The dissensions, occasioned by these different schemes of ecclesiastical polity, were every way adapted to produce a violent schism in the church; so much the more, as each of the contending parties pretended to derive their respective plan from the injunctions of Christ, and the practice of his disciples. And in effect, it divided the English nation into two parties, who during a long time treated each other with great animosity and bitterness, and whose feuds, on many occasions, proved detrimental to the civil interests and prosperity of the nation. This schism, however, which did such mischief in England, was, by the prudence and piety of a few great and excellent divines, confined to that country, and prevented from either becoming univerfal, or interrupting the fraternal union that prevailed between the church of England and the reformed churches abroad. worthy men, that thus set bounds to the influence of these unhappy divisions, found great op- CENT.

[a] See Epist. de Ordinat. et Successione Episcopal. in. Unitate Fratrum Bobem. conservata, in Chrift. Matth. Pfaffii Inflitationibus Juris Eccles. p. 410.

position made, by the suggestions of bigotry, to XVI. their charitable purpose. To maintain, however, the bonds of union between the episcopal church of England and the presbyterian churches in foreign countries, they laid down the following maxim, which, though it be not universally adopted, tends nevertheless to the preservation of external concord among the Reformed, viz. "That Jesus Christ has left upon record no ex-" press injunctions with respect to the external form of government, that is to be observed in "his church; and consequently, that every na"tion hath a right to establish such a form, as " feemeth conducive to the interests, and suitable to the peculiar state, circumstances, and exi-" gencies of the community, provided that such an establishment be in no respect prejudicial to truth, or favourable to the revival of super-" flition [b]."

XXXIII. It was the opinion of Calvin, not The state only that flagitious and profligate members were church difto be cut off from the facred fociety, and excluded from the communion of the church, but also that men of dissolute and licentious lives were punishable by the laws of the state, and the arm of the civil magistrate. In this he differed from Zuingle, who, supposing that all authority, of every kind, was lodged in the hands of the magistrate alone, would not allow to the ministers of the church the power of excluding flagitious offenders from its communion, or withholding from them the participation of its facra-

[b] See Spanhemii Opera, tom. ii. lib. viii. ix. p. 1055. This was the general opinion of the British divines who lived in the earliest period of the Reformation, and was first abandoned by archbishop Whitgift. See Neal's History of the Puritans, vol. iii. p. 140.

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART II. ments  $\lceil c \rceil$ . But the credit and influence of Calvin were so great at Geneva, that he accomplished his purpose, even in the face of a formidable opposition from various quarters. He established the severest rules of discipline to correct the licentious manners of the times, by which he exposed himself to innumerable perils from the malignity and resentment of the dissolute, and to perpetual contests with the patrons of voluptuousness and immorality. He executed, moreover, these rules of discipline with the utmost rigour, had them strengthened and supported by the authority of the state, excluded obstinate offenders from the communion of the church, by the judicial sentence of the Consistory, and even went so far as to procure their banishment from the city; not to mention other kinds of punishment, of no mild nature, which, at his desire, were inslicted upon men of loose principles and irregular lives [d]. The [c] See a remarkable letter of Rodolph Gualter, in Fueslin's Centuria I. Epistolarum à Reformatoribus Helveticis scriptarum, p. 478, where he expresses himself thus: "Excommunicationem neque Zuinglius... neque Bullingerus, unquam probarunt, et... obstiterunt iis qui eam aliquando voluerunt introducere... Basileæ quidem Œcolampadius, multum dissuadente Zuinglio, instituerat... sed adeo non durabilis suit illa constitutio, ut Œcolampadius illam abrogârit," &c. See also p. 50.

[d] Of all the undertakings of Calvin, there was not one that involved him in so much trouble, or exposed him to such imminent danger, as the plan he had formed, with fuch refolution and fortitude, of purging the church, by the exclusion of obstinate and scandalous offenders, and inslicting severe punishments on all such as violated the laws, enacted by the church, or by the consistory, which was its representative. See the Life of Calvin, composed by Beza, and prefixed to his Letters.—Spon's Histoire de Geneve, and particularly the notes, tome ii. p. 45.65.—Calvin's Letters, and more especially those addressed to Jaques de Bourgogne, published at Amsterdam, in 8vo, in the year 1744, p. 126. 132. 153. party at Geneva, which Calvin called the section Libertines (because they defended the licentious customs of ancient times, the erection of stews, and other vicious practices, not only by their discourse and their actions, but even by force of arms),

CENT.

The clergy in Switzerland were highly pleased with the form of church-government that had sections been established at Geneva, and ardently defirous PART II. of a greater degree of power to restrain the insolence of obstinate sinners, and a larger share of authority in the church, than they were intrusted with by the ecclesiastical constitution of Zuingle. They devoutly wished that the discipline of Calvin might be followed in their cantons, and even made some attempts for that purpose. But their desires and their endeavours were equally vain; for the cantons of Bern, Zurich, and Basil, distinguished themselves among the others in opposing this change, and would by no means permit the bounds, that Zuingle had set to the jurisdiction of the church, to be removed, nor its power and authority to be augmented in any respect [e].

XXXIV. All the various branches of learning, The flate of whether facred or profane, flourished among the learning among the reformed during this century, as appears evi-Reformed. dently by the great number of excellent productions which have been transmitted to our times. Zuingle, indeed, seemed disposed to exclude philosophy from the pale of the church [f]; but in this inconsiderate purpose he had few followers, and the succeeding doctors of the Helvetic church was both numerous and powerful. But the courage and reso-lution of this great reformer gained the ascendency, and triumphed over the opposition of his enemies.

[e] See the account of the tumults and commotions of Laufanne, in the Museum Helveticum, tom. ii. p. 119 .- The disputes that were carried on upon this occasion, in the Palatinate, which adopted the ecclesiastical discipline of Geneva, are recorded by Altingius, in his Hift. Eccles. Palat. and by Struvius, in his Hift. Eccles. Palat. German. p. 212.

[f] Zuingle, in the dedication of his book, de vera et falsa Religione, to Francis I. king of France, expresses himself in the following terms; "Philosophiz interdictum est a Christi scholis: at isti (Sorbonistæ) secerun t eam cælestis verbi magistram."

CENT. XVI. SECT. III PART II. were soon persuaded of the necessity of philosophical knowledge, more especially in controverfies, and refearches of a theological kind. Hence it was, that in the year 1588, an academical body was founded at Geneva by Calvin, whose first care was to place in this new seminary a professor of philosophy for the instruction of youth in the principles of reasoning. It is true, indeed, that this professor had a very limited province assigned to him, being obliged to confine his instructions to a mere interpretation of the precepts of Aristotle, who at this time was the oracle of all the public schools [g], and whose philosophical principles and method were exclusively adopted by all the other reformed colleges; though it is certain, that the philosophy of Ramus was, for some time, preferred, by many of the doctors of Basil, to that of the Stagirite [h].

The interpreters and commentators of feripture,

XXXV. The reformed church, from its very infancy, produced a great number of expositors of scripture, whose learned and excellent commentaries deserve a memorable place [i] in the history of theological science. The exposition that Zuingle has given of the greatest part of the books of the New Testament, is far from being destitute

[g] Beza, in his Epistole Theologice (ep. xxxvi. p. 156), speaks thus: "Certum nobis ac constitutum est, et in ipsis tradendis logicis et in ceteris explicandis disciplinis ab Aristotelis sententia ne tantillum quidem dessectere."

[b] See Casp. Brandtii Vita Jacobi Arminii, p. 12.22.

[i] Dr. Mosheim pays a tribute to these great men of the Reformed church, that seems to be extorted by justice, with a kind of effort, from the spirit of party. He says, that Zuingle's labours are not contemptible; that Calvin attempted an illustration of the sacred writings; that the New Testament of Beza has not, even at this day, entirely lost the reputation it formerly enjoyed. This is faint praise; and therefore the translator has, without departing from the tenor of the author's phraseology, animated a little the coldness of his panegyric.

destitute of merit [k]. He was succeeded by CENT. Bullinger, Œcolampadius, and Musculus, and XVI. also by others, who, though inferior to these PART II. great men in erudition and genius, deserve a certain degree of approbation and esteem. But the two divines who shone with a superior and unrivaled lustre in this learned list of sacred expositors, were John Calvin, and Theodore Beza. The former composed an excellent commentary on almost all the books of Holy Writ; and the latter published a Latin version of the New Testament, enriched with theological and critical observations, which has passed through many editions, and enjoys, at this day, a confiderable part of the reputation and applause with which it was crowned at its first appearance. It must be acknowleged, to the honour of the greatest part of these commentators, that, wisely neglecting those allegorical significations and mystical meanings which the irregular fancies of former expositors had attributed to the terms of Holy Writ, they employed their whole diligence and industry in investigating the literal sense, the full energy of the words of scripture, in order to find out the true intention of the sacred writer. It must, however, be observed, on the other hand, that some of these interpreters, and more especially Calvin, have been sharply censured for applying, to the temporal state and circumstances of the Jews, several prophecies that point to the Messiah and to the Christian dispensation in the most evident and palpable manner, and thus removing some of ment that Zuingle employed his very learned and excellent labours. He expounded the book of Genesis, together with the twenty-four first chapters of Exodus, and gave new versions of the Psalms, of the Prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah.

CENT. the most striking arguments in favour of the divinity of the gospel [/].

The theological doctrine of the Reformed church.

XXXVI. The state of theology, and the revolutions it underwent among the Helvetic and the other reformed churches, were nearly the same as among the Lutherans. Zuingle was one of the first reformed doctors who reduced that sacred science into a certain sort of order, in his book concerning true and false Religion, which contained a brief exposition of the principal doctrines of Christianity. This production was followed by one much more comprehensive in its contents, and perfect in its kind, composed by Calvin, and entitled, Infi-tutes of the Christian Religion, which held in the reformed churches the same rank, authority, and credit, that the Loci Communes of Melancthon obtained among us [m]. The example of Calvin animated the doctors of his communion, and produced a great number of writers of Common-Place Divinity, some more, others less voluminous, among whom Musculus, Peter Martyr, Piscator, particularly excelled. The most ancient of these writers are, generally speaking, the best, on account of their simplicity and clearness, being untainted with that affectation of fubtilty, and that scholastic spirit, which have eclipsed the ment of many a good genius. Calvin was a model in this respect, more especially in his Institutes; 2 work remarkable for the finest elegance of style, and the greatest ease and perspicuity of expression, together with the most perfect simplicity of method, and clearness of argument. But this simplicity was foon effaced by the intricate science of

[1] See Ægidii Hunnii Calvinus Judaizans, published at Wittenberg, in 8vo, in 1595, which was refuted by David Pareus, in a book published the same year at Neustadt, under the title of Calvinus Orthodoxus.

[m] The reader must not forget that the learned author of this History is a Lutheran.

the

1ap. II. The History of the Reformed Church.

: schools. The philosophy of Aristotle, which CENT. s taught in almost all the seminaries of learnz and suffered much from falling into bad hands, inuated itself into the regions of theology, and adered them barren, thorny, intricate, and comy, by the enormous multitude of barbarous ms, captious questions, minute distinctions, d useless subtilties, that followed in its train [n]. XXXVII. The [n] It must however be acknowleded, that the scholastic thod of teaching theology seems to have first insected our ie Lutheran) church, though the contagion spread itself, after, among the reformed doctors. It was certainly very ent in Holland at the time of the famous fynod of Dordrecht. this affembly Maccovius, professor at Francker, a man eply versed in all the mysteries of the scholastic philosophy, s accused of herely by his colleague Sibrand Lubbert. hen the matter was examined, the fynod declared at Maccovius was unjustly accused of heresy; but that, his divinity lectures, he had not followed that simpliy of method, and clearnels of expression, which are commendle in a public teacher of Christianity; and that he rather llowed the subtile manner of the scholastic doctors, than e plain and unaffected phraseology of the inspired writers. he decision of the synod is expressed by Walter Balcanral (in the acts of that ecclefiastical assembly, subjoined his letters to Sir Dudley Carleton) in the following ords: " Maccovium ... nullius hæreseos reum teneri... ccasse eum, quod quibusdam ambiguis et obscuris scholasris phrasibus usus sit: quod scholasticum docendi modum netur in Belgicis academiis introducere ... Monendum eseum, ut cum spiritu sancto loquatur, non cum Bellarmino it Suarezio*." These admonitions produced little ef-& on Maccovius, as appears by his theological writings, hich are richly seasoned with scholastic wit and intricate eculations. He therefore appears to have been the first who stroduced the subtilties of philosophy into the theological rstem of the Reformed churches in Holland. He was not, owever, alone in this attempt, but was seconded by the acute br. William Ames, minister of the English church at the lague, and several others of the same scholastic turn. This ethod of teaching theology must have been in use among most all the reformed doctors before the synod of Dordrecht, if re give credit to Episcopius, who, in the last discourse he addreffed

See the Asta Synodi Dord. in Hale's Golden Remains, p. 161.—and hilippi Limborchii Epistolar. Ecclesiasticar. Collect. p. 574.

CIXI 71. The face of STEELS OF munity.

XXXVII. The reformed doctors of this conture penerales cancinaes their treatiles of didactic themogy with a delinearism of the moral duties that are incumpent upon Christians, and the rules melon de af practice that are prescribed in the Gaspel. The method was unferred by Calvin, and was followed, out of refrect for his example, by almost all the divines of his communion, who looked upon him as their model and their guide. This entirest man, towards the conclusion of his Institute, freaks of the power of the magifirate, and the ends of civil government; and, in the last chapter, gives the portrainure of the life and manners of a true Christian, but in a much more concile manner than the conjourners, eignity, and importance of the subject seemed to require. The progress of morality among the Reformed, was obstructed by the very fame means that retarded its improvement among the Lutherans. It was neglected amidit the tumult of controversy; and while every pen was drawn to maintain certain systems of dectrine, sew were employed in cultivating or promoting that nobleit of all sciences, which has virtue, life and manners, for its objects.

> addressed to his disciples at Leyden, tells them that he lad earefully avoided this scholastic divinity; and that this was the principal cause that had drawn on him the vehement intred and oppolition of all the other professors and teachers of theology. His words are as follow: "Videbam veritates multarum et maximarum rerum in ipla scriptura sacra, elabratis humana industria phrasibus, ingeniosis vocularum scionibus, locorum communium artificiolis texturis, exquisis terminorum ac formularum inventionibus, adeo involutam, perplezam et intricatam redditam effe, ut Œdipo sæpe opus ellet ad Sphingem illam theologicam enodandam. bine primz lacrymz-Reducendam itaque terminorum a tolicorum et cuivis obviorum simplicitatem semper sequendu putavi, et sequestrandas, quas academiz et scholz tanquan proprias sibi vendicant, logicas philosophicasque specialtiones et dictiones." See Philippi Limborchii Vita Episcopi, p. 123. This

This master-science, which Calvin and his asciates had left in a rude and imperfect state, was sit reduced into some kind of form, and exained with a certain degree of accuracy and recision, by William Perkins [o], an English vine, as the reformed doctors universally allow. le was seconded in this laudable undertaking by elingius, a native of Holland, whose writings ere composed in the Dutch language. It was by worthy and pious spirit of emulation, excited y the example of these two doctors, that Wilam Ames, a native of Scotland, and professor of ivinity at Francker [p], was engaged to compose complete body of Christian morality [q]. These writers

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

[o] Mr. William Perkins was born at Marston in Warricksbire, in the first year of queen Elizabeth, and educated christ's College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow.
Ie was one of the most famous practical writers and preachers shis age. His puritanical and non-conforming principles apposed him to the cognizance of the High-Commission Court; at his peaceable behaviour, and eminent reputation in the earned world, procured him an exemption from the persecuions that fell upon his brethren. His works, which were wrinted in three volumes solio, assord abundant proofs of his siety and industry, especially when it is considered that he sied in the 44th year of his age.

Terkins, fled from the perfecution of archbishop Banroft, and was invited by the states of Friseland to the divisity chair in the university of Francker, which he silled with great reputation for twelve years. He then removed to Rotterdam, at the invitation of an English church there, and became their pastor. He was at the synod of Dordrecht, and informed king James's ambassador at the Hague, from time to time, of the debates of that assembly. Besides his controversial writings against the Arminians, he published the following; Medulla Theologia (the work here referred to by Dr.
Mosheim);—Manudusio Logica;—Cases of Conscience;—
Analysis of the Book of Psalms;—Notes on the First and Second Epipiles of St. Peter, &c. These productions are not void of merit, considering the times in which they were written.

[q] In the Preface to his famous book de Conscientia et ejus jure, Dr. Ames observes, that an excessive zeal for Volume were furnessed by widers will threw fare the of this important interest.

The reformed material was less different and the largery distens, which was less than the largery distension of the most appropriate a most enterpy distension as a material and the may be the may be at a material and the may be at a may be at a material and the may be at a material and the larger of the visitings of Calvin, at a material and the interest of the property of the chablishman and the material and the materials are the materials and the materials are a most another than increase of a materials and the appropriate and proceeding. The appropriate and proceeding the increase of the formal and the materials are appropriate to the fifter to formal and finder to the materials and finder to the second of the constituted and produced in antituding programs of moconstitution of the produced of moconstitution of the produced of the proconstitution of the produced of the produced of the constitution of the produced of the produced of the constitution of the produced of the produced of the

constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the
constitution of the produced of the produced of the constitution of the produced of th manifer of course to prior that to every the fulpicion of having been formes int at bille fire a favourable folistion.

for Jeff Way an these compactions? Our author feems, on some countries, to import he had activities relation with the spirit of party.

reformed

formed churches [t]. Their doctrine, as far CENT. it can be known by the writings of Calvin and SECT. III. other antagonists (for I do not find that PART II. ese fanatics published any account of their nets), amounted to the following propositions: That the Deity was the fole operating cause in the mind of man, and the immediate author of all human actions; that, consequently, the distinctions of good and evil, that had been established with respect to these actions, were false and groundless, and that men could not, properly speaking, commit sin; that religion consisted in the union of the spirit, or rational foul, with the Supreme Being; that all those who had attained this happy union, by fublime contemplation and elevation of mind, were then allowed to indulge, without exception or restraint, their appetites and passions; that all their actions and pursuits were then perfectly innocent; and that, after the death of the body, they were to be united to the Deity." These stravagant tenets resemble, in such a striking anner, the opinions of the Beghards, or Brethren the Free Spirit, that it appears to me, beyond 1 doubt, that the Libertines, or Spirituals, now. nder consideration, were no more than a remnant f that ancient sect. The place of their origin nds to confirm this hypothesis; since it is well nown, that, in the fourteenth and fifteenth ceniries, Flanders swarmed with licentious fanatics of is kind.

XXXIX. We must not confound (as is fre- and with uently done) with these fanatics, another kind the Liber-if Libertines, whom Calvin had to combat, and Genevavho gave him much trouble and perplexity during he whole course of his life and ministry; I mean the Libertines of Geneva. These were rather a cabal of rakes than a sect of fanatics; for they made no pretences to any religious system, but pleaded only for the liberty of leading voluptuous and immoral lives. This cabal was composed of fuch licentious citizens as could not bear the severe discipline of Calvin, who punished with rigour, not only dissolute manners, but also whatever carried the aspect of irreligion and impiety. This irregular troop stood forth in defence of the licentiousness and dissipation that had reigned in their city before the Reformation, pleaded for the continuance of those brothels, banquetings, and other entertainments of a lenfual kind, which the regulations of Calvin were designed to abolish, and employed all the bitterness of reproach and invective, all the resources of fraud and violence, all the powers of faction, to accomplish their purpose [u]. In this turbulent cabal there were several persons, who were not only notorious for their dissolute and scandalous manner of living, but also for their atheistical impiety and contempt of all religion. Of this odious class was Gruet, who attacked Calvin with the utmost animosity and fury, calling him bishop of Asculum, the new pope, and branding him with other contumelious denominations. This Gruet denied the divinity of the Christian religion, the immortality of the soul, the difference between moral good and evil, and rejected, with disdain, the doctrines that are deemed most sacred among Christians; for which impieties he was at last brought before the civil tribunals, in the year 1550, and was punished with death [w].

[t] See "Calvini Instructio adversus sanaticam et suriosam lectam Libertinorum, qui se Spirituales vocant," among his theological tracts.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

[w] Spon's Hist. tome ii. p. 47. in the notes.

XL. The

[u] Spon's Histoire de Geneve, tome ii. p. 44. in the notes of the editor, in the edition in 12mo. published at Geneve in 1730.

XL. The opposition that was made to Calvin did not end here. He had contests of another kind to sustain against those who disapproved his theological fystem, and, more especially, his melancholy and discouraging doctrine in relation to eternal and pute with obsolute decrees. These adversaries selt, by a disagreeable experience, the warmth and violence of his baughty temper, and that impatience of contradiction which arose from an over-jealous concern for his honour, or rather for his unrivaled supremacy. He would not suffer them to remain at Geneva; and, in the heat of controversy, being carried away by the impetuolity of his passions, he accused them of crimes from which they have been fully absolved by the impartial judgment of unprejudiced posterrity [x]. Among these victims of Calvin's unlimited power and excellive zeal, we may reckon Sebastian Castalio, master of the public school at Geneva, who, though not exempt from failings [y], was nevertheless a man of probity, and was also remarkable for the extent of his learning and the elegance of his talte. As this learned man could neither approve al! the measures that were followed, nor all the opinions that were entertained by Calvin and his colleagues, and particularly that of abfoluse and unconditional predestination, he was deposed from his office in the year 1544, and banished

ÇRNT. Catria's dif-Caffallo i

[a] At this day, we may venture to speak thus freely of the rath decisions of Calvin, since even the doctors of Geneve, as well as those of the other reformed churches, ingenuously acknowlege that the eminent talents and excellent qualities of that great man were accompanied with great defects, for which, however, they plead indulgence, in consideration of his services and virtues. See the Notes to Spon's Histoire de Geneva, tome ii. p. 110, as also the Preface to Calvin's Letters to Jaques de Bourgogne, p. 19.

<sup>[7]</sup> See Bayle's Didionary, at the article Castalio, in which the merit and demerit of that learned man feem to be impartially and accurately examined.

CENT. with Bolsee,

from the city. The magistrates of Bafil, however, ** received this ingenious exile, and gave him the ". Greek professorship in their university [z].

XLI. A like fate happened to Jerome Bolfec, a French monk of the Carmelite order, who, though much inferior to Castalio in genius and learning, was judged worthy of esteem, on account of the motive that brought him to Geneva; for it was a conviction of the excellence of the protestant religion that engaged him to abandon the monastic retreats of superstition, and to repair to this city, where he followed the profession of physic. His imprudence, however, was great, and was the principal cause of the misfortunes that befell him. led him, in the year 1551, to lift up his voice in the full congregation, after the conclusion of divine worship, and to declaim, in the most indecorous manner, against the doctrine of absolute decrees; for which offence he was thrown into prison, and, soon after, sent into banishment. He then returned to the place of his nativity, and to the communion of Rome, and published the most bitter and slanderous libels, in which the reputation, conduct, and morals of Calvin and Beza were cruelly attacked [a]. From this treatment of Bolfec arole the mifunderstanding between Calvin and Jaques de Bourgogne, a man illustrious by his descent from the dukes of Burgundy, who was Calvin's great patron and intimate friend, and who had fettled at Geneva with no other view than to enjoy the pleasure of conversing with him.

[z] See Uytenbogard's Ecclefiastical History, written in Dutch, part II. p. 70.—73, where that author endeavours to desend the innocence of Castalio.—See also Colomesii Italia Orientalis, p. 99.—Bayle's Dia. tome i. p. 792.

[a] See Bayle's Dist. at the article Bolsec.—Spon's Hift. & Geneve, tome ii. p. 55. in the Notes.—Biblioth. Raisenie, tome xxxii. p. 446, tome xxxiv. p. 409.

de Bourgogne had employed Bolsec as his physical CBNT, cian, and was so well satisfied with his services, XVI. that he endeavoured to support him, and to pre- FART II. vent his being ruined by the enmity and authority of Calvin. This incenfed the latter to such a degree, that he turned the force of his resentment against this illustrious nobleman, who, to avoid his vengeance, removed from Geneva, and passed the remainder of his days in a rural retreat [b].

XLII. Bernardin Ochino, a native of Sienna and with (and, before his conversion, general of the Capuchin order), was, in the year 1543, banished from Switzerland, in consequence of a sentence passed upon him by the Helvetic church. This profelyte, who was a man of a fertile imagination, and a lively and fubtile turn of mind, had been invited to Zurich as pastor of the Italian church established in that city. But the freedom, or rather the licentiousness, of his sentiments, justly exposed him to the displeasure of those who had been his patrons and protectors. For, among many other opinions very different from those that were commonly received, he maintained that the law, which confined a husband to one wife, was susceptible of exceptions in certain cases. In his writings also he prepagated several notions that were repugnant to the theological system of the Helvetic doctors, and pushed his enquiries into many subjects of importance, with a boldness and freedom that were by no means suitable to the genius and spirit of the age in which he lived. Some have, however, undertaken his defence, and have alleged in his behalf, that the errors he maintained at the time of his banishment (when, worn out with age, and op-

[b] See Lettres de Calvin à Jaques de Bourgogne, Preface, p. 8.—La Bibliotheque Raisonnée, tome xxxii. p. 444. tome xxxiv. p. 406.

CENT. XVI. SECT. MI. PART II. pressed with poverty, he was rather an object of compassion, than of resentment), were not of such a heinous nature as to justify so severe a punishment. However that may have been, this unsortunate exist retired into Poland, where he embraced the communion of the Anti-Trinitarians and Anabaptists [c], and ended his days in the year 1564[d].

The controverly between the church of England and the Puritage.

XLIII. It is remarkable that those very doctors, who animadverted with such severity upon all that dared to dissent from any part of their theological system, thought proper, nevertheless, to behave with the greatest circumspection, and the most pacific spirit of mildness, in the long controversy which was carried on with such animosity between the puritans, and the advocates of episcopacy, in England. For if, on the one hand, they could

[c] Boverii Annales Caputinorum.—Together with a book, entitled, La guerre Serapbique, ou Histoire des perils qu'a cours la barbe des Capuchins, livr. ii. p. 147. livr. iii. p. 190. 230.—Observationes Halenses Latina, tom. iv. Observ. xx. p. 406. tom. v. Observ. i. p. 3.—Bayle's Didion. at the article Ochin.—Christ. Sandii Biblioth. Auti-Trinitar. p. 4. Niceron's Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire des hommes illustres, tome xix.

p. 166. [d] Ochino did not leave the accusations of his adverfaries without a reply; he published, in Italian, Five Books of Apology for his character and conduct, which were printed, with a Latin translation of them by Seb. Castalio, without the date of the year. The Geneva edition of this apology bears date 1554, and is in 8vo. There is a German edition in 4to, published (according to Vogtius, Catal. Lib. rar. p. 430,) in the year 1556. That copy in the Jena library bears date 1559. See Mylius's Memor. Acad. Jeneuf. C. 6. p. 432. Beza, in his letter to Dudithius, insults the memory of Ochino, and pretends to justify the feverity with which he was trested, in such a taunting and uncharitable manner as does him little credit. See his Epist. Theolog. Geneva, 1575. Epist. i. p. 10. and Ep. 81. What the writers of the Romish church have laid to the charge of Ochino, may be seen in the life of cardinal Commendoni, written by Gratiani, bishop of Audis, (and published in a French translation by the eloquent Flechier, hithop of Nismar,) B. 2. C. 9. p. 138,—149. N.

201

not but stand well affected to the Puritans, who were stedfast defenders of the discipline and sentiments of the Helvetic church; so, on the other, they were connected with the episcopal doctors by the bonds of Christian communion and fraternal love. In this critical situation, their whole thoughts were turned towards reconciliation and peace; and they exhorted their brethren, the Puritans, to put on a spirit of meekness and forbearance towards the episcopal church, and not to break the bonds of charity and communion with its rulers or its members. Such was the gentle spirit of the doctors in Switzerland towards the church of England, notwithstanding the severe treatment the greatest part of the Reformed had received from that church, which constantly insisted on the divine origin of its government and discipline, and scarcely allowed, to the other reformed communities, the privileges, or even the denomination, of a true church. This moderation of the Helvetic doctors was the dictate of prudence. They did not think it expedient to contend with a generous and flourishing people, or to incur the displeasure of a mighty queen, whole authority seemed to extend not only to her own dominions, but even to the United Provinces, which were placed in her neighbourhood, and, in some measure, under her protection. Nor did the apprehensions of a general schism in the reformed church contribute a little to render them meek, moderate, and pacific. It is one thing to punish and excommunicate a handful of weak and unfupported individuals, who attempt to disturb the tranquillity of the state by the introduction of opinions, which, though neither highly abfurd, nor of dangerous consequence, have yet the demerit of novelty; and another to irritate, or promote divisions in a flourishing church, which, though weakened by intestine feuds, is yet both powerful EE 3

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART II. CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. and respectable in a high degree. Besides, the dispute between the church of England and the other resormed churches did not, as yet, turn upon points of doctrine, but only on the rites of external worship and the form of ecclesiastical government. It is, however, to be observed, that, soon after the period now under consideration, certain religious doctrines were introduced into the debate between the two churches, that contributed much to widen the breach, and to obscure the prospect of reconciliation [d].

Many perfens of eminent genius and learning among the reformed. "XLIV. That the reformed church abounded, during this century, with great and eminent men, justly celebrated for their talents and learning, is too well known to require proof. Besides Calvin, Zuingle, and Beza, who exhibited to the republic of letters very striking instances of genius and erudition, we may place, in the list of those who have gained an immortal name by their writings, Œcolampadius, Bullinger, Farel, Viret, Martyr, Bibliander, Musculus, Pelican, Lavater, Hospinian, Ursinus, Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury, Szegedinus, and many others, whose names and merits are recorded by the writers of literary whether puritans or others, seemed, indeed, hitherto of one mind about the doctrines of faith. But, towards the latterest of queen Elizabeth's reign, there arose a party, that first wished to soften, and then to overthrow, the received opinious concerning predestination, perseverance, free-will, essectual grace, and the extent of Christ's redemption. These are the doctrines to which Dr. Mosheim alludes in this passage. The clergy of the episcopal church began to lean towards the notions concerning these intricate points, which Arminius propagated some time after this: while, on the other hand, the puritans adhered rigorously to the system of Calvin. Several episcopal doctors remained attached to the same system; and all these abettors of Calvinism, whether episcopal or presbyterian, were called dostrinal puritans.

history,

history, particularly by Melchior Adam, Antony CENT. XVI. Wood, Gerard Brandt, and Daniel Neal, the XVI. learned and industrious author of the History of PART II. the Puritans.

CHAP. III.

The History of the Anabaptists or Mennonites.

I. THE true origin of that sect which acquired The origin of the denomination of Anabaptists [e] by Anabaptists their obscure.

[e] The modern Mennonites reject the denomination of Anabaptists, and also disavow the custom of repeating the ceremony of baptism, whence this denomination is derived. They acknowlege that the ancient anabaptists practised the repetition of baptism to those who joined them from other Christian churches; but they maintain, at the same time, that this custom is at present abolished by far the greatest part of their community. See Herm. Schyn's Historie Mennonitarum plenior Deductio, cap. ii. p. 32. But here, if I do not mistake, these good men forget that ingenuous candour and simplicity, of which, on other occasions, they make such oftentation, and have recourse to artifice, in order to disguise the true cause and origin of the denomination in question. They pretend, for instance, that the Anabaptists, their ancestors, were so called from their baptizing a fecond time all adult persons, who left other churches to enter into their communion. But it is certain, that the denomination in question was given them, not only on this account, but also, and indeed principally, from the following consideration; that they did not look upon those who had been baptized in a state of infancy, or at a tender age, as rendered, by the administration of this sacrament, true members of the Christian church; and therefore infifted upon their being re-baptized, in order to their being received into the communion of the Anabaptists. It is likewife certain, that all the churches of that communion, however they may vary in other respects, and differ from each other in their tenets and practices, agree nevertheless in this opinion, and, as yet, persevere obstinately in it. In a more especial manner are the ancient Flemish Anabaptists entitled to this denomination; for they not only re-baptize the children E B 4

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. their administering anew the rite of baptism to those who came over to their communion, and derived that that have been already baptized in other churches, but even observe the same method with respect to persons that are come to the years of reason and discretion; and, what is sill more remarkable, the different fects of Anabaptifts deal in the same manner one with another; each sect re-baptizes the persons that enter into its communion, although they have already received that sacrament in another sect of the same denomination; and the reason of this conduct is, that each sect confiders its baptism alone as pure and valid. It is indeed to be observed, that there is another class of Anabaptists, called Waterlandians, who are more moderate in their principles, and wifer in all respects than those now mentioned, and who do not pretend to re-baptize adult persons, who have already been baptized in other Christian churches, or in other sects of their own denomination. These moderate sectaries are, however, with propriety termed Anabaptists, on account of their rebaptizing such as had received the baptismal rite in a state of infancy or childhood. The patrons of this feet seem, indeed, very fludious to conceal a practice which they cannot deay to take place among them; and their eagerness to conceal & airfles from an apprehension of reviving the hatred and severities which formerly pursued them. They are afraid, left, by acknowleging the truth, the modern Mennonites should be confidered as the descendants of those flagitious and fanatical Anabaptists of Munster, whose enormities rendered their very name odious to all true Christians, All this appears evident from the following passage in Schyn's Historia Memonitarum plenior Deductio, tom. ii. p. 32., where that author pretends to prove that his brethren are unjustly fligmatised with the odious thenomination of Anabaptists. His worth are: "Anabaptismus ille plane obsolevit; et a multis retro annis neminem eujuscunque sectre Christianze sidei, juxta mandatum Christi baptizatum, dum ad nostras Ecclesias transire eupit, re-baptigaverunt." i. c. That species of Ansbaptism with which we are charged, exists no longer, nor has it happened during the space of many years past, that any person prosessing Christianity, of whatever church or lect he may have been, and who had been previously baptized according to the commandment of Christ, has been re-baptized upon his entering into our communion. This passage would, at first sight, induce an inattentive reader to imagine that there is no Juch thing among the modern Mennonites, as the custom of re-baptizing those who enter into their community. But the words which we have marked of Mennonites from the famous man to whom owe the greatest part of their present selicity, idden in the depths of antiquity, and is, of consence, extremely difficult to be ascertained [f].

CENT. XVI. SECT. HI. PART II.

ted in Italic, (juxta mandatum Christi, i. e. according to the sandment of Christ,) discover sufficiently the artistice and I that lie hidden in this apology; for the Anabaptists tain that there is no commandment of Christ in favour of nt baptism. Moreover, we see the whole fallacy exposed, hat the author adds to the sentence already quoted: " Sed s etiam adultorum baptismum ut sufficientem agnoscunt." ertheless, this author, as if he had perfectly proved his t, concludes, with an air of triumph, that the odious name inabaptist cannot be given, with any propriety, to the monites at this day; "Quare (says he), verissimum est, odiosum nomen Anabaptistarum illis non convenire." his, however, he is certainly in an error; and the name in tion is just as applicable to the modern Mennonites, as it to the sect from which they descend, since the best and A of the Mennonites maintain, in conformity with the ciples of the ancient Anabaptists, that the baptism of its is destitute of validity, and consequently are very carein re-baptizing their profelytes, notwithstanding their ng been baptized in their tender years, in other Christian rches. Many circumstances persuade me that the declaons and representations of things given by the modern monites, are not always worthy of credit. Unhappily weed by the miseries and calamities in which their ancestors e involved, they are anxiously careful to conceal entirely le tenets and laws that are the distinguishing characteristics their sect; while they embellish what they cannot totally ceal, and disguise with the greatest art such of their instiions as otherwise might appear of a pernicious tendency, might expose them to censure.

merated by Caspar Sagittarius, in his Introductio ad Histor. less. tom. i. p. 826. and by Christ. M. Pfassius, in his Intro. Vistor. Liter. Theologia, part II. p. 349.—Add to these a dern writer and a Mennonite preacher, Herman Schyn, published at Amsterdam, in 8vo., in the year 1723, his toria Mennonitar. and, in 1729, his Plenior Deductio Histor, naonit. These two books, though they do not deserve the e of a History of the Mennonites, are nevertheless useful, reder to come at a thorough knowledge of the affairs of this is, for this author is much more intent upon defending brethren against the accusations and reproaches with which they

TATE

This encertainty will not appear furprising, when it is considered, that this fect started up fuddenly in irreral commiss, at the fame point of time, maer leaders of different talents and different istentions, and at the very period when the first contells of the reformers with the Roman postiffs drew the attention of the world, and employed the nens of the learned, in fach a manner, as to reader हैं। तर्रोक्ष को कोई कार्र केरोक्स almost matters of industraire. The majora Measurates not only combine themselves as the defoendants of the Maderale, who were to enterculy oppressed and penatural in the definite bends of the Romin charch has mesend suraries, to be the purel constitut of their renatiable inflators, being equally event to all principles of rebellion, on the one hand and a ingredient of function on the order of Their americales, on the contrary, received them as the desirendance of those turbulent and furious of animate, who, in the fixteenth conturn involved internal Surrented Germany, and mer district the trivials of Webshelle, in such trees it him remember, and diffres; and silers, that, artified by the dreadful fate of their minimum and the industrial by the moderate creates end with insultines of Mennon, they niumicael tie incite at their primitive enthulish, and were gradually brought to a better mind. After turing examined their different accounts of ther have been limited, than thefall in tracing out the origin, progress, and remaind outs it them seed. Indeed the Memoritaes have not much remain to head either of the extraordinate learning in descents if this their patren; and it is to be imagined, that they may easily had a more able defeaded. For an accurace account if the Memoriae historiaes, and their confidings it think, he la. Chest. Kachen Billiathers That Jaminister 7, 16.

See Them. Salve: Pleaser Duindin Higher. Mann. cap. The 2st alle a Duicel work, by Galen Abrahamon, municipal, Producing the Chryslenen, the Dunginglade grand words in 22.

the

he origin of the Anabaptists with the utmost attenion and impartiality, I have found that neither of hem can justly be pronounced conformable to brick truth.

CENT. PART 31.

probable

II. It may be observed, in the first place, that The most he Mennonites are not entirely in an error when account of hey boast of their descent from the Waldenses, Petrobrusians, and other ancient sects, who are Anabartists. is in the integral of the truth, in the imes of general darkness and superstition. Before he rife of Luther and Calvin, there lay concealed, n almost all the countries of Europe, particularly n Bohemia, Moravia, Switzerland, and Germany, nany persons, who adhered tenaciously to the folowing doctrine, which the Waldenses, Wickliffites, ind Hussites, had maintained, some in a more disguised, and others in a more open and public manner; viz. "That the kingdom of Christ, or the risible church he had established upon earth, was in affembly of true and real faints, and ought therefore to be inaccessible to the wicked and unrigheous, and also exempt from all those institutions, which human prudence suggests, to oppose the progress of iniquity, or to correct and reform transzreflors." This maxim is the true source of all he peculiarities that are to be found in the religious loctrine and discipline of the Mennonites; and it is most certain, that the greatest part of these peculiarities were approved by many of those, who, before the dawn of the Reformation, entertained the notion already mentioned, relating to the visible church of Christ [b]. There were, however, different

See also Lydii Waldensia, and Allix's Ancient Churches of Piedmont, ch. xxii.—xxvi. p. 211.—280. N.

[b] See, for an account of the religious sentiments of the Waldenses, Limborch's excellent History of the Inquisition, translated into English by the learned Dr. Samuel Chandler, book I. chap. viii.—It appears from undoubted testimonies, that the Wicklissites and Hussites did not greatly differ from the Woldenses, with regard to the point under consideration.

CENT. XVI. BEGT. 111. PART 11.

ferent ways of thinking among the different members of this fect, with respect to the methods of attaining to such a perfect church-establishment as they had in view. Some, who were of a fanatical complexion on the one hand, and were perfuaded on the other, that such a visible church as they had modeled out in fancy, could not be realized by the power of man, entertained the pleasing hope, that God, in his own good time, would erect to himself a holy church, exempt from every degree of blemish and impurity, and would set apart, for the execution of this grand design, a certain number of chosen instruments, divinely affisted and prepared for this work, by the extraordinary fuccours of his Holy Spirit. Others, of a more prudent and rational turn of mind, entertained different views of this matter. They neither expected stupendous miracles, nor extraordinary revelations; fince they were perfuaded, that it was possible, by human wisdom, industry, and vigilance, to purify the church from the contagion of the wicked, and to restore it to the simplicity of its original constitution, provided that the manners and spirit of the primitive Christians could recover their lost dignity and lustre.

III. The drooping spirits of these people, who had been dispersed through many countries, and persecuted every where with the greatest severity, were revived when they were informed that Luther, seconded by several persons of eminent piety, had attempted with success the reformation of the church. Then they spoke with openness and freedom; and the enthusiasm of the fanatical, as well as the prudence of the wife, discovered themfelves in their natural colours. Some of them imagined, that the time was now come in which God himself was to dwell with his servants in an extraordinary manner, by celestial succours, and to establish upon earth a kingdom truly spiritual and divine.

CENT.

divine. Others, less fanguine and chimerical in their expectations, flattered theinfelves, nevertheless, with the fond hopes of the approach of that happy period, in which the restoration of the church, which had been fo long expected in vain, was to be accomplished, under the divine protection, by the labours and counsels of pious and eminent men. This sect was soon joined by great numbers, and (as usually happens in sudden revolutions of this nature) by many persons, whose characters and capacities were very different, though their views seemed to turn upon the same object. Their progress was rapid; for, in a very short time, their discourses, visions, and predictions, excited commotions in a great part of Europe, and drew into their communion a prodigious multitude, whose ignorance rendered them easy victims to the illusions of enthusiasm. It is, however, to be observed, that as the leaders of this fect had fallen into that erroneous and chimerical notion, that the new kingdom of Christ, which they expected, was to be exempt from every kind of vice, and from the smallest degree of imperfection and corruption, they were not satisfied with the plan of reformation proposed by Luther. They looked upon it as much beneath the sublimity of their views, and, consequently, undertook a more perfect reformation, or, to express more properly their visionary enterprise, they proposed to found a true church, entirely spiritual, and truly divine.

IV. It is difficult to determine, with certainty, The first motions of the particular spot that gave birth to that seditious the Anaand pestilential sect of Anabaptists, whose tumul- bestiles. tuous and desperate attempts were equally pernicious to the cause of religion, and the civil interests of mankind. Whether this sect arose in Switzerland, Germany, or Holland, is still a point of debate, whose decision is of no great importance.

/

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

ance [i]. It is most probable, that several persons of this odious class made their appearance at the same time, in different countries; and we may fix this period foon after the dawn of the Reformation in Germany, when Luther arose to set bounds to the ambition of Rome. This appears from a variety of circumstances, and especially from this striking one, that the first Anabaptist doctors of any eminence were, almost all, heads and leaders of particular and separate sects. For it must be carefully observed, that though all these projectors of a new, unspotted, and perfect church, were comprehended under the general denomination of Anabaptifis, on account of their opposing the baptism of infants, and their re-baptizing fuch as had received that facrament in a state of childhood in other churches. yet they were, from their very origin, subdivided into various sects, which differed from each other in points of no small moment. The most pernicious faction of all those that composed this motley multitude, was the sect which pretended that the founders of the new and perfect church, already mentioned, were under the direction of a divine impulse, and were armed against all opposition by the power of working miracles. It was this detestable faction that, in the year 1521, began their fanatical work, under the guidance of Munzer, Stubner, Storck, and other leaders of the same furious complexion, and excited the most unhappy tumults and commotions in Saxony and the adjacent countries. They employed at first the various arts of persuasion, in order to propagate their doctrine. They preached, exhorted, admonished, and rea-

[i] Fueslin has attempted to examine, whether the Anabaptists first arose in Germany or Switzerland, in a German work, entitled, Beytrage zur Schweizerisch Resormat. Geschichte, tom. i. p. 190. tom. ii. p. 64. 265. 327. tom. iii. p. 323. but without success.

foned, in a manner that seemed proper to gain the CENT.

multitude, and related a great number of visions XVI.

sect. 111. and revelations with which they pretended to have been favoured from above. But when they faw that these methods of making proselytes were not attended with fuch rapid fuccess as they fondly expected, and that the ministry of Luther, and other eminent reformers, proved detrimental to their cause, they had recourse to more expeditious measures, and madly attempted to propagate their fanatical doctrine by force of arms. Munzer and his affociates affembled, in the year 1525, a numerous army, chiefly composed of the peasants of Suabia, Thuringia, Franconia, and Saxony, and, at the head of this credulous and deluded rabble, declared war against all laws, governments, and magistrates of every kind, under the chimerical pretext, that Christ was now to take the reins of civil and ecclesiastical government into his own hands, and to rule alone over the nations. But this seditious crowd was routed and dispersed, without much difficulty, by the elector of Saxony and other princes; Munzer, their ringleader, was ignominiously put to death, and his factious counsellors were scattered abroad in different places [k].

V. This bloody defeat of one part of these seditious and turbulent fanatics, did not produce that of this feet. effect upon the rest that might naturally have been expected; it rendered them, indeed, more timorous, but it did not open their eyes upon their delusion. It is certain, that, even after this period, numbers of them, who were infected with the same odious principles that occasioned the destruction of Mun-

<sup>[1]</sup> See Seckendorf, Histor. Lutheranismi, lib. i. p. 192. 304. lib. ii. p. 13.—Sleidan, Commentar. lib. v. p. 47.—Joach. Camerarii Vita Melanahonis, p. 44.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

zer, wandered about in Germany, Switzerland, and Holland, and excited the people to rebellion by their seditious discourses. They collected congregations in several places; affected to foretell, in consequence of a divine commission, the approaching abolition of magistracy, and the downfall of civil rulers and governors; and while they pretended to be ambassadors of the Most High, insulted on many occasions the majesty of heaven by the most flagitious crimes. Those who distinguished themselves by the enormity of their conduct in this infamous sect, were Louis Hetzer, Balthazar Hubmeyer, Felix Mentz, Conrad Grebel, Melchior Hoffman, and George Jacob, who, if their power had seconded their designs, would have involved all Switzerland, Holland, and Germany, in tumult and bloodshed [1]. A great part of this rabble seemed neally delirious; and nothing more extravagant or more incredible can be imagined than the dreams and visions that were constantly arising in their disordered brains. Such of them as had some sparks of reason left, and had reflection enough to reduce their notions into a certain form, maintained, among others, the following points of doctrine: "That the church of Christ ought to be exempt from all sin—that all things ought to be in common among the faithful—that all usury, tithes, and tribute, ought to be entirely abolished—that the baptism of infants was an invention of the devil—that every Christian was invested with a ower of preaching the Gospel, and consequently, CENT. at the church stood in no need of ministers or ustors—that in the kingdom of Christ civil mastrates were absolutely useless—and that God Il continued to reveal his will to chosen persons / dreams and visions [m].

<sup>[1]</sup> See Jo. Bapt. Ottii Annales Anabaptis. p. $1.—In Hornbeckii Summa controvers. lib. v. p. 332.—Anton. Matthæi Anales. veteris evi, tom. iv. p. 629. 677. 679.—Bernard. Raupachii Aust. Evangel. tom. ii. p. 41.—Jo. Georg. Scheh born, in Asis ad Histor. Eccles. pertinentibus, tom. i. p. 100.—See also Arnold's Kirchen Hist. lib. xvi. cap. xxi. p. 727; and the German work of Fuellin, entitled, Beytrage as der Sebweizer. Resorm. Geschichte.

It would betray, however, a strange ignorance, an unjustifiable partiality, to maintain, that I those who professed this eccentric and abrd doctrine were chargeable with that furious id brutal extravagance which has been menmed as the character of too great a part of their &. This was by no means the case; several of ese enthusiasts discovered a milder and more scific spirit, and were free from any other reroach, than that which refulted from the errors ey maintained, and their too ardent desire of reading them among the multitude. It may ill farther be affirmed with truth, that many of iose who followed the wifer class of Anabaptists, id even some who adhered to the most extravaant factions of that sect, were men of upright inntions and fincere piety, who were seduced into is mystery of fanaticism and iniquity, on the one and, by their ignorance and simplicity, and on the ther, by a laudable defire of reforming the corrupt ate of religion.

VI. The progress of this turbulent sect in al-Severe punost all the countries of Europe, alarmed all who inflicted on ad any concern for the public good. Princes, the Anund fovereign states, exerted themselves heck these rebellious enthusiasts in their caeer, by isluing out, tirst, severe edicts to restrain heir violence, and employing, at length, capital runishments to conquer their obstinacy [n]. here

[m] This account of the doctrine of the Anabaptists is prinipally taken from the learned Fuellin already quoted.

[n] It was in Saxony, if I mistake not, and also in the ear 1525, that penal laws were first enacted against this fanatical VOL. 1V.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

here a maxim, already verified by repeated expenence, received a new degree of confirmation; for the conduct of the Anabaptists, under the pressures of perfecution, plainly shewed the extreme difficulty of correcting or influencing, by the prospect of fuffering, or even by the terrors of death, minds that are either deeply tainted with the poison of fanaticism, or firmly bound by the ties of religion. In almost all the countries of Europe, 22 unspeakable number of these unhappy wretches preferred death, in its worst forms, to a retraction of their errors. Neither the view of the flames that were kindled to confume them, nor the ignominy of the gibbet, nor the terrors of the fword, could shake their invincible, but ill-placed constancy, or make them abandon tenets, that appeared dearer to them than life and all its cajoyments. The Mennonites have preferred volsminous records of the lives, actions, and unhappy fate of those of their sect, who suffered death for the crimes of rebellion or herefy, which were imputed to them [o]. Certain it is, that they were treated with feverity; and it is much to be lamented that so little distinction was made be tween the members of this fect, when the fword of justice was unsheathed against them. Why were |

See a German work of the learned Kappius, entitled, Naciles von Reformations Urhunden, part I. p. 176.—Charles V. incensed at the increasing impudence and iniquity of the enthusiasts, issued out against them severe edicts, in the years 1527 and 1529. (See Ottii Annales Analogue, p. 45) The magistrates of Switzerland treated, at sirth, with markable lenity and indulgence, the Anabaptists who lived markable lenity and indulgence, the Anabaptists who lived markable them still more enterprising and insolent, it was judged proper to have recourse to a different manner of proceeding. Accordingly the magistrates of Zurich denounced capital prishment against this riotous sect in the year 1525.

[0] See Joach. Christ. Jehring, Prefat. ad Historian Mo

nonitarum, p. 3.

E

3

he innocent and the guilty involved in the same CENT. ate? Why were doctrines purely theological, or, XVI. t worst, fanatical, punished with the same rigour PART hat was shewn to crimes inconsistent with the eace and welfare of civil society? Those who ad no other marks of peculiarity than their adainistering baptism to adult persons only, and heir excluding the unrighteous from the external ommunion of the church, ought undoubtedly to ave met with milder treatment than that which ras given to those seditious incendiaries, who were or unhinging all government and destroying all ivil authority. Many suffered for errors which hey had embraced with the most upright intentions, educed by the eloquence and fervour of their loctors, and persuading themselves that they were contributing to the advancement of true religion. But, as the greatest part of these enthusiasts had communicated to the multitude their visionary iotions, concerning the new spiritual kingdom that ras foon to be erected, and the abolition of mapistracy and civil government that was to be the mmediate effect of this great revolution, this endered the very name of an Anabaptist unspeakbly odious, and made it always excite the idea of 1 seditious incendiary, a pest to human society. t is true, that many Anabaptists suffered death, not on account of their being considered rebellious subjects, but merely because they were judged to be incorrigible heretics; for in this century the error of limiting the administration of paptism to adult persons only, and the practice of re-baptizing such as had received that sacrament in a state of infancy, were looked upon as most lagitious and intolerable heresies. It is, nevertheless, certain, that the greatest part of these wretched sufferers owed their unhappy fate to their rebellious principles and tumultuous proceedings, and that many also were punished for their te-F F 2 merity

LENT LAL SELL SAL FOR AND The Ann-

Munitim.

merity and importaintee, which led them to the com-

VII. There thereis upon record a most shocking inflance of this, in the dreadful commotions that were excited at Manter, in the year 1533, by force Datch Ambaptits, who choic that dy as the scene of their hound operations, and commined in it finch deeds as would furpals all credibility, were ther not attested in a manner that excludes every degree of doubt and uncertainty. A handful of madmen, who had gotten into their heads the visionary notion of a new and spiritual kingdom, soon to be established in an extraordnary manner, formal themselves into a society, under the guidance of a few illiterate leaders chosen out of the populace. And they perfuaded, not only the ignorant multitude, but even feveral among the learned, that Munfter was to be the feat of this new and heavenly Jerufalem, whole fpiritual dominion was thence to be propagated to all parts of the earth. The bold ringleaders of this furious tribe were John Matthison, John Bockhold, a tailor of Leyden, one Gerard, with some others, whom the blind rage of enthusiasim, or the still more culpable principles of sedition, had embarked in this extravagant and desperate cause. They made themselves masters of the city of Munster, deposed the magistrates, and committed all the enormous crimes, and ridiculous follies, which the most perverse and infernal imagination could fuggest [*]. John Bockhold was proclaimed king and legislator of this new hierarchy; but his reign was transitory, and his beaded them at Muniter, ran stark maked in the streets, mirried eleven wives, at the same time, to shew his approbation of polygamy, and entitled himself king of Sion; all which formed but a very small part of the permicious sollies of this mock monarch.

end deplorable: for Munster was, in the year 1536, retaken after a long siege by its bishop and sovereign, count Waldeck, the New Jerusalem of the Anabaptists destroyed, and its mock monarch punished with a most painful and ignominious death [q]. The disorders occasioned by the Anabaptists at this period, not only in Westphalia, but also in other parts of Germany [r], shewed

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

[q] See Anton. Corvini Narratio de miserabili Monaster. Anabapt. excidio, published first at Wittenberg in the year 1536. -Casp. Sagittar. Introduct. in Histor. Ecclesiast. tom. i. p. 537. & 835 .- Herm. Hamelmann, Historia Renati Evangelii in urbe Monaster. in Operib. Genealogico-Historicis, p. 1203.—The elegant Latin poem of Bolandus in elegiac verse, entitled, J. Fabricii Bolandi Motus Monasteriens. Libri decem, Colon. 1546, in 8vo. Herm. Kerssenbrock, Histor. Belli Monaster. edited by Dan. Gerdes, Miscellan. Groningens. Nov. tom. ii. p. 377. The last-mentioned author speaks also of Bernard Rothman, an ecclesiastic of Munster, who had introduced the Reformation into that city, but afterwards was infected with the enthusiasm of the Anabaptists; and who, though in other respects, he had thewn himself to be neither destitute of learning nor virtue, yet enlifted himself in this fanatical tribe, and had a share in their most turbulent and furious proceedings.

[r] The scenes of violence, tumult, and sedition, that were exhibited in Holland by this odious tribe, were likewise terrible. They formed the design of reducing the city of Leyden to ashes, but were happily prevented, and severely punished. John of Leyden, the Anabaptist king of Munster, had taken it into his head that God had made him a present of the cities of Amsterdam, Deventer, and Wesel; in consequence of which, he sent bishops to these three places, to preach bis gospel of sedition and carnage. About the beginning of the year 1535, twelve Anabaptists, of whom sive were women, assembled at midnight in a private house at Amsterdam. One of them, who was a tailor by profession, fell into a trance, and after having preached and prayed during the space of four hours, ftripped himself naked, threw his clothes into the fire, and commanded all the affembly to do the same, in which he was obeyed without the least reluctance. He then ordered them to follow him through the streets in this state of nature, which they accordingly did, howling and bawling out, Woe! woe! the wrath of God! the wrath of God! wee to Babylon! When, after being seized and brought before the magistrates, clothes F F 3

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. thewed too plainly to what horrid extremities the pernicious doctrines of this wrong-headed sect were calculated to lead the inconsiderate and unwary; and therefore it is not at all to be wondered, that the secular arm employed rigorous measures to extinpate a faction, which was the occasion, and the source, of unspeakable calamities in so many countries [s].

Menno Simonia VIII. While the terrors of death, in the most dreadful forms, were presented to the view of this miserable sect, and numbers of them were executed every day, without a proper distinction being made between the innocent and the guilty, those who escaped the severity of justice were in the most discouraging situation that can well be imagined. On the one hand, they beheld, with sorrow, all their hopes blasted by the total defeat of their brethren at Munster; and, on the other, they were silled with the most anxious apprehensions of the perils that threatened them on all sides. In this critical situation they derived much clothes were offered them to cover their indecency, they refused them obstinately, and cried aloud, "We are the naked truth." When they were brought to the scaffold, they sang and danced, and discovered all the marks of enthusiastic phrensy.—These tumults were followed by a regular and deep-laid conspiracy, formed by Van Geelen (an envoy of the mock-king of Mun-Rer, who had made a very considerable number of proselytes) against the magistrates of Amsterdam, with a design to wrek the government of that city out of their hands. This incendiary marched his fanatical troop to the town-house on the day appointed, drums beating, and colours flying, and fixed there his head-quarters. He was attacked by the burghers, who were affifted by some regular troops, and headed by several of the burgomafters of the city. After an obstinate resistance, he was surrounded with his whole troop, who were put to death in the severest and most dreadful manner, to serve as examples to the other branches of the sect, who were exciting commotions of a like nature in Friseland, Groningen, and other provinces and cities in the Netherlands.

[s] Ger. Brandt, Histor. Resorm. Belgice, tom. i. lib. ii.

comfort

comfort and affistance from the counsels and zeal of Menno Simonis, a native of Friseland, who had formerly been a popish priest, and, as he himself confesses, a notorious prosligate. This man went over to the Anabaptists, at first, in a clandestine manner, and frequented their assemblies with the utmost secrecy; but, in the year 1536, he threw off the mask, resigned his rank and office in the Romish church, and publicly embraced their communion. About a year after this, he was earnestly solicited by many of the sect to assume, among them, the rank and functions of a public teacher; and as he looked upon the persons, from whom this proposal came, to be exempt from the fanatical phrenfy of their brethren at Munster (though, according to other accounts, they were originally of the same stamp, only rendered somewhat wiser by their sufferings), he yielded to their entreaties. From this period to the end of his days, that is, during the space of twenty-five years, he traveled from one country to another with his wife and children, exercising his ministry under a series of pressures and calamities of various kinds, and constantly exposed to the danger of falling a victim to the severity of the laws, East and West Friseland, together with the province of Groningen, were first visited by the zealous apostle of the Anabaptists: thence he directed his course into Holland, Guelderland, Brabant, and Westphalia, continued it through the German provinces that lie on the coast of the Baltic sea, and penetrated as far as Livonia. In all these places his ministerial labours were attended with remarkable success, and added to his sect a predigious number of profelytes. Hence he is defervedly looked upon as the common chief of almost all the Anabaptists, and the parent of the sect that still subsists under that denomination. The fuccess F F 4

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART II.

CENT. success of this missionary will not appear very furprising to those who are acquainted with his character, spirit, and talents, and who have a just notion of the state of the Anabaptists at the period now under consideration. Menno was a man of genius; though, as his writings shew, his genius was not under the direction of a very found judgment. He had the inestimable advantage of a natural and persuasive eloquence, and his learning was fufficient to make him pals for an oracle in the eves of the multitude. He appears, moreover, to have been a man of probity, of a meek and tractable spirit, gentle in his manners, pliant and oblequious in his commerce with per-I'm at all ranks and characters, and extremely zerlous in promoting practical religion and virtue, which he recommended by his example, as well as In his precepts. A man of fuch talents and dipolitions could not fail to attract the admiration of the people, and to gain a great number of adherents wherever he exercised his ministry. But no where could be expect a more plentiful harvest than among the Anahaptifts, whose ignorance and fimplicity rendered them peculiarly susceptible of new impressions, and who, having been long accultomed to leaders that resembled phrenetic Bacchanals more than Christian ministers, and often dehided by adious impostors, who involved them in endlets perils and calamities, were rejoiced to find at length a teacher, whole doctrine and manners flattered them with the hopes of more prosperous dave in

IX. Memo

Aloung was born a: Witmarium, a village in the neighbourhood of Rollwer: in Friteland, in the year 1505, and not 10 1406, as most writers tel. us. After a life of toil, peril, and ngitation, he departed in peace in the year 1361, in the ducky of Follows at the country less of a certain nobleman (not far from the site of Oldeston), who, moved with compation at a view of the perils to which Menno was exposed, and the Inares The

IX. Menno drew up a plan of doctrine and CENT. discipline of a much more mild and moderate nature than that of the furious and fanatical Anabaptists already mentioned, but somewhat more severe, though more clear and consistent, than wine. the doctrine of some of the wifer branches of that fect, who aimed at nothing more than the restoration of the Christian church to its primitive purity. Accordingly he condemned the plan of ecclesiastical discipline, that was founded on the prospect of a new kingdom, to be miraculously established by Jesus Christ on the ruins of civil government, and the destruction of human rulers, and which had been the pestilential source of fuch dreadful commotions, such execrable rebellions, and fuch enormous crimes. He declared, publicly, his dislike of that doctrine which pointed out the approach of a marvellous reformation in the church by the means of a new and extraordinary effusion of the Holy Spirit. expressed his abhorrence of the licentious tenets which several of the Anabaptists had maintained, with respect to the lawfulness of polygamy and divorce; and finally considered, as unworthy of toleration, those fanatics who were of opinion that the Holy Ghost continued to descend into the minds of many chosen believers, in as extraordinary a manner as it did at the first establishment of the Christian church; and that it testified it's that were daily laid for his ruin, took him, with some of his associates, into his protection, and gave him an asylum. We have a particular account of this famous Anabaptist in the Cimbria Literata of Mollerus, tom. ii. p. 835. See also Schyn's Plenior Dedua. Histor. Mennon. cap. vi. p. 116.—The writings of Menno, which are almost all composed in the Dutch language, were published in folio at Amsterdam, in the year 1651. An excessively diffuse and rambling style, frequent and unnecessary repetitions, an irregular and confused method, with other defects of equal moment, render the perusal of these preductions highly disagreeable.

peculiar prefence to fereral of the faithful, by miracles, predictions, dreams, and vilians of vacommonly received among the Anabaptills in relation to the baptilm of infants, the Millennian, or thousand-years reign of Christ upon earth, the exclusion of magnificates from the Christian church, the abolition of war, and the probabition of oaths enjoined by our Savieur, and the vanity, as well as the pernicious effects, of human science. But while Menno retained these doctrines in a general sense, he explained and modified them in fuch a manner, as made them refemble the religious tenets that were univerfally received in the protestant churches; and this rendered them agreeable to many, and made them appear inotientive even to numbers who had no inclination to embrace them. It however so happened, that the nature of the doctrines, considered in themselves, the eloquence of Menno, which set them off to such advantage, and the circumstances of the times, gave a high degree of credit to the religious system of this famous teacher among the Anabaptists, so that it made a rapid progress in that sect. And thus it was in consequence of the ministry of Menno that the different forts of Ana-baptists agreed together in excluding from their communion the fanatics who dishonoured it, and in renouncing all tenets that were detrimental to the authority of civil government, and, by an unexpected coalition, formed themselves into one community [u].

X. To

[u] These facts shew us plainly how the famous question concerning the origin of the modern Anabaptists may be resolved. The Mennonites oppose, with all their might, the account of their descent from the ancient Anabaptists, which we find in so many writers, and would willingly give the modern Anabaptists a more honourable origin. (See Schyn's Histor. Mes-

X. To preserve a spirit of union and concord in a body composed of such a motley multitude sectim.

CENT.

The origin itarted up among the Anabaptifts.

nonitar. cap. viii, ix. xxi. p. 223.) The reason of their zeal of the sects in this matter is evident. Their fituation has rendered them that have They live, as it were, in the midst of their enemies, and are constantly filled with an uneasy apprehension, that, at some time or other, malevolent zealots may take occasion, from their supposed origin, to renew against them the penal laws, by which the seditious Anabaptists of ancient times suffered in fuch a dreadful manner. At least, they imagine that the odium under which they lie, will be greatly diminished, if they can prove, to the satisfaction of the public, the falsehood of the general opinion, that "the Mennonites are the descendants of the Anabaptists;" or, to speak more properly, "the same individual sect, purged indeed from the fanaticism that formerly differed it, and rendered wifer than their ancestors, by reflection and fuffering."

After comparing diligently and impartially what has been alleged by the Mennonites and their adversaries in relation to this matter, I cannot see what it is properly, that forms the subject of their controverly; and if the merits of the cause be stated with accuracy and perspicuity, I do not see how there can be any dispute at all about the matter now under consideration. For, in the first place, if the Mennonites mean nothing more than this, that Menno, whom they consider as their parent and their chief, was not infected with those odious opinions which drew the just severity of the laws upon the Anabaptists of Munster; that he neither looked for a new and spotless kingdom that was to be miraculously erected on earth, nor excited the multitude to depose magistrates, and abolish civil government; that he neither deceived himself, nor imposed upon others, by fanatical pretentions to dreams and visions of a supernatural kind; if (I fay) this be all that the Mennonites mean, when they speak of their chief, no person, acquainted with the history of their sea, will pretend to contradict them. Even those who maintain that there was an immediate and intimate connection between the ancient and modern Anabaptists, will readily allow, to be true, all that has been here said of Menno.—2dly, If the Anabaptifts maintain, that fuch of their churches as received their doctrine and discipline from Menno, have not only discovered, without interruption, a pacific spirit and an unlimited fubmission to civil government (abstaining from every thing that bears the remotest aspect of sedition, and shewing the utmost abharrence of wars and bloodshed), but have even banished from their confessions of faith, and their religious instructions,

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. of dissonant members, required more than human power; and Menno neither had, nor pretended

to

all those tenets and principles that led the ancient Anabaptists to disobedience, violence, and rebellion; this also will be readily granted.—And if they allege, in the third place, that even the Anabaptists who lived before Menno, were not all so delirious as Munzer, or so outrageous as the fanatical members of that sect, who rendered their memory eternally odious by the enormities they committed at Munster; that, on the contrary, many of these ancient Anabaptists abstained religiously from all acts of violence and sedition, followed the pious examples of the ancient Waldenses, Henricians, Petrobrusians, Hussites, and Wicklissites, and adopted the doctrine and discipline of Menno, as soon as that new parent arose to reform and patronize the sect; all this will be allowed without hesitation.

But, on the other hand, the Mennonites may affert many things in defence of the purity of their origin, which cannot be admitted by any person who is free from prejudice, and well acquainted with their history. If they maintain, 1st, that none of their fect descended, by birth, from those Anabaptists, who involved Germany and other countries in the most dreadful calamities, or that none of these furious fanatics adopted the doctrine and discipline of Menno, they may be easily refuted by a great number of facts and testimonies, and particularly by the declarations of Menno himself, who glories in his having conquered the ferocity, and reformed the lives and errors of several members of this pestilential sect. Nothing can be more certain than this fact, viz. that the first Mennonite congregations were composed of the different sorts of Anabaptists already mentioned, of those who had been always inoffensive and upright, and of those who, before their conversion by the ministry of Menno, had been seditious fanatics. Nor can the acknowlegement of this incontestable fact be a just matter of reproach to the Mennonites, or be more dishonourable to them, than it is to us, that our ancestors were warmly attached to the idolatrous and extravagant worthip of paganism or popery.-Again, it will not be possible for us to agree with the Mennonites, if they maintain, 2dly, that their sect does not retain, at this day, any of those tenets, or even any remains of those opinions and doctrines which led the seditious and turbulent Anabaptists of old to the commission of so many, and of such enormous crimes. For, not to mention Menno's calling the Anabaptists of Munster his Brethren (a denomination indeed somewhat softened by the epithet of erring, which he joined to it), it is undoubtedly true, that the doctrine concerning the nature

to have, supernatural succours. Accordingly, the feeds of dissension were, in a little time, sown among this people. About the middle of this century, a warm contest, concerning excommunication, was excited by feveral Anabaptists, headed by Leonard Bowenson and Theodore Philip; and its fruits are yet visible in that divided sect. These men carried the discipline of excommunication to an enormous degree of severity. They uot only maintained, that open transgressors, even those who sincerely deplored and la-mented their faults, should, without any previous warning or admonition, be expelled from the communion of the church; but were also au dacious enough to pretend to exclude the persons, thus excommunicated, from all intercourse with their wives, husbands, brothers, sisters, children, and other relatives. The same persons, as might naturally be expected from this instance of their severity, were harsh and rigid in their manners, and were for imposing upon their brethren a course of moral discipline, which was difficult and austere in the highest degree. Many of the Anabaptists protested against this, as unreasonable and unne-nature of Christ's kingdom, or the church of the New Testament, which led by degrees the ancient Anabaptists to those furious acts of rebellion that rendered them so odious, is by no means effaced in the minds of the modern Mennonites. is, indeed, weakened and modified in such a manner as to have lost its noxious qualities, and to be no longer pernicious in its influence; but it is not totally renounced or abolished.—I shall not now enquire how far even the reformed and milder sect of Menno has been, in time past, exempt from tumults and commotions of a grievous kind, nor shall I examine what passes at this day among the Anabaptists in general, or in particular branches of that sect; since it is certain, that the more eminent communities of that denomination, particularly those that flourish in North Holland, and the places adjacent, behold fanatics with the utmost aversion, as appears evidently from this circumstance, among others, that they will not fuffer the people called Quakers to enter into their communion.

cessary;

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. ceffary; and thus the community was suddenly divided into two sects; of which the one treated transgressors with lenity and moderation, while the other proceeded against them with the utmost rigour. Nor was this the only difference that was observable in the conduct and manners of these two parties; fince the members of the latter fect were remarkable for the fordid austerity that reigned in their rules of life and practice; while the former, considering more wisely the present state of human nature, were less severe in their injunctions, and were not altogether regardless of what is called decent, agreeable, and ornamental in life and manners. Menno employed his most vigorous efforts to heal these divisions, and to restore peace and concord in the community; but when he perceived that his attempts were vain, he conducted himself in such a manner as he thought the most proper to maintain his credit and influence among both parties. For this purpose he declared himself for neither side, but was constantly trimming between the two, as long as he lived; at one time, discovering an inclination towards the austere Anabaptists; and, at another, seeming to prefer the milder discipline and manners of the moderate brethren. But in this he acted in opposition to the plainest dictates of prudence; and accordingly the high degree of authority he enjoyed, rendered his inconstancy and irreference not only disagreeable to both parties, but also the means of inflaming, instead of healing, their divisions [w].

The rigid and modetate Anabaptifis. XI. These two sects are, to this very day, distinguished by the denominations of fine and

gross,

[w] See the Historia Bellorum et Certaminum que, ab A. 1615, inter Mennonitas contigerunt, published by an anonymous Mennonite.—See also a German work by Simon Frederic Rues, entitled, Nachrichten von dem Zustande der Mennoniten, published in 8vo at Jena, in the year 1743.

gross [x], or to express the distinction in more intelligible terms, into rigid and moderate Anabaptists. The former observe, with the most religious accuracy, veneration, and precision, the ancient doctrine, discipline, and precepts of the purer fort of Anabaptists; the latter depart much more from the primitive sentiments, manners, and institutions of their sect, and more nearly approach those of the protestant churches. The gross or moderate Anabaptists consisted, at first, of the inhabitants of a district in North-Holland, called Waterland; and hence their whole sect received the denomination of Waterlandians [y]. The fine or rigid part of that community were, for the most part, natives of Flanders; and hence their fect acquired the denomination of Flemings or Flandrians. But new dissensions and contests arose among these rigid Anabaptists, not, in-feinen and groben, which are the German denominations used to distinguish these two sects. The same terms have been introduced among the protestants in Holland; the fine denoting a set of people, whose extraordinary, and sometimes fanatical devotion, resembles that of the English Methodists; while the epithet gross is applied to the generality of Christians, who make no extraordinary pretensions to sanctity and devotion.

CENT. XVI. BECT. 111. PART 11:

[7] See Fred. Spanhemii Ekenchus Controvers. Theol. Op. tom. iii. p. 772. The Waterlandians were also called Johannites, from John de Ries, who was of great use to them in many respects, and who, assisted by Lubert Gerard, composed their confession of faith in the year 1580. This confession (which far surpasses both in point of simplicity and wisdom all the other confessions of the Mennonites) has passed though several editions, and has been lately republished by Herman Schyn, in his Histor. Mennon. cap. vii. p. 172. It was also illustrated in an ample Commentary, in the year 1686, by Peter Joannie, a native of Holland, and pastor among the Waterlandians. It has, however, been alleged, that this famous production is by no means the general confession of the Waterlandians, but the private one only of that particular congregation, of which its author was the pastor. See Rues, Nachrichten, P. 93.

CENT. deed, concerning any point of doctrine, but about the SECT. III. manner of treating persons that were to be excom-PART II. municated, and other matters of inferior mo ment. Hence a new schism arose; and they were subdivided into new sects, distinguished by the appellations of Flandrians and Friselanders, who differed from each other in their manners and difcipline. The members of a third division took the name of their country, like the two former sects, and were called Germans; for the Anabaptists of Germany passed in shoals into Holland and the Netherlands. But, in process of time, the greatest part of these three sects came over, by degrees, to the moderate community of the Waterlandians, with whom they lived in the strictest bonds of peace and union. Those among the rigid Anabaptists, who refused to follow this example of moderation, are still known by the denomination of the Old Flemings, or Flandrians, but are few in number, when compared with the united congregations of the milder fects now mentioned.

The fource from which the Mennomites drew their doctrine.

XII. No fooner had the ferment of enthusialm fublided among the Mennonites, than all the different fects, into which they had been divided, unanimoutly agreed to draw the whole system of their religious doctrine from the Holy Scriptures alone. To give a fatisfactory proof of the fincerity of their resolution in this respect, they took care to have Confessions drawn up, in which their fentiments concerning the Deity, and the manner of ferving him, were expressed in the terms and phrases of Holy Writ. The most ancient, and also the most respectable of these Confessions, is that which we find among the Waterlandians. Several others, of later date, were also composed, some for the use of large communities, for the people of a whole district, and which were consequently submitted to the inspection of the magistrate; others designed only for the benefit of private societies [z]. It might not, perhaps, be amis to enquire, whether all the tenets received among the Mennonites are faithfully exhibited and plainly expressed in these Confessions, or whether several points be not there omitted which relate to the internal constitution of this sect, and would give us a complete idea of its nature and tendency. One thing is certain, that whoever peruses these Confessions with an ordinary degree of attention, will eafily perceive, that those tenets which appear detrimental to the interests of civil society, particularly such as relate to the prerogatives of magistracy, and the administration of oaths, are expressed with the utmost caution, and embellished with the greatest art, to prevent their bearing an alarming aspect. At the fame time, the more discerning observer will see, that these embellishments are intended to disguise the truth, and that the doctrines of the Anabaptists, concerning the critical points above-mentioned, are not represented, in their public Confessions, in their real colours.

CENT. XVI.

XIII. The ancient Anabaptists, who trusted in Their an extraordinary direction of the Holy Spirit, were late reduced (under the pretended influence of so infallible a into a religion was lystem.

[z] See an account of these Confessions in Schyn's Plenior Deduct. Hist. Mennon. cap. iv. p. 78. 115. where he maintains, that " these Confessions prove as great an uniformity among the Mennonites, in relation to the great and fundamental doctrines of religion, as can be pretended to by any other Christian community." But should the good man even succeed in persuading us of this boasted uniformity, he will yet never be able to make his affertion go down with many of his own brethren, who are, to this day, quarreling about several points of religion, and who look upon matters, which appear to him of little consequence, as of high moment and importance to the cause of true piety. And, indeed, how could any of the Mennonites, before the present (eighteenth) century, believe what Schyn here affirms, fince it is well known, that they disputed about matters which he treats with contempt, as if they had been immediately connected with their eternal interests?

guide)

CENT. XVI. SECT. 111. PART 11.

guide) little solicitous about composing a system of religion, and never once thought of instilling into the minds of the people just sentiments of the Deity. Hence warm dissensions arose among them, concerning matters of the highest consequence, fuch as the Divinity of Christ, polygamy, and divorce. Menno and his disciples made some attempts to supply this defect. Yet we find, after his time, that the Mennonites, more especially those of the rigid class, carried the freedom of their religious speculations to such an excessive height, as bordered upon extravagance. This circumstance alone, were there no other, proves that the heads of this sed employed the smallest part of their zeal to prevent the introduction and propagation of error, and that they looked upon fanctity of life and manners alone as the essence of true religion. The Waterlandian, indeed, and after them the other Anabaptists, were obliged, at length, to draw up a summary of their doctrine, and to lay it before the public, in order to remove the odium that was cast upon them, on account of their bold tenets, and their extravagant disputes, which were likely to involve them in the greatest calamities. But these Confessions of the Mennonites were, in reality, little more than a method of defence, to which they were reduced by the opposition they met with, and must therefore be rather considered as an expedient to avert the indignation of their enemies, than as articles of doctrine, which all of them without exception were obliged For we do not find among the Mennonites (a part of the modern Waterlandians excepted) any injunction, which expressly prohibits individuals from entertaining or propagating religious opinions different from the public creed of the community. And, indeed, when we look attentively into the nature and constitution of this sect, it will appear to have been, in some measure, founded upon this principle, that practical piety is the CENT. essence of religion, and that the surest and most infallible mark of the true church is the fanctity PART 11. of its members; it is at least certain, that this principle was always univerfally adopted by the Anabaptists.

XIV. If we are to form our judgment of the The religion religion of the Mennonites from their public creeds of the Mennonites. and confessions, we shall find, that though it differs widely from the doctrine of the Lutherans, yet in most things it varies little from that of the reformed church. They consider the sacraments in no other light, than as figns or symbols of the spiritual bleffings administered in the Gospel; and their ecclesiastical discipline seems to be almost entirely the same with that of the Presbyterians. There are, however, peculiar tenets, by which they are diftinguished from all other religious communities; and these may be reduced under three heads. For it is observable, that there are certain doctrines, which are holden in common by all the various fects of the Mennonites; others, which are only received in some of the more eminent and numerous fects of that community (such were the fentiments of Menno, which hindered him from being universally acceptable to the Anabaptists); and some, which are only to be found among the more obscure and inconsiderable societies of that denomination. These last, indeed, appear and vanish, alternately, with the transitory sects that adopt them, and therefore do not deserve to employ our attention any farther in this place.

XV. The opinions that are entertained by the The great Mennonites in general, seem to be derived from which the this leading and fundamental principle, that the general kingdom which Christ established upon earth is a the Menvisible church, or community, into which the holy and the just are alone to be admitted, and which is consequently exempt from all those institutions and rules of doctine of norites is lounded.

XVI. for the correction and reformation of the wicked.

FART 11.

This fanatical principle was frankly avowed by the ancient Mennonites: their more immediate descendants, however, began to be less ingenuous; and in their public Confessions of Faith, they either disguised it under ambiguous phrases, or expressed themselves as if they meant to renounce it. To renounce it entirely was, indeed, impossible, without falling into the greatest inconsistency, and undermining the very foundation of those doctrines that distinguished them from all other Christian societies [2]. And vet it is certain that the present Memonites, as they have, in many other respects, departed from the principles and maxims of their ancestors, have also given a striking instance of descention in the case now before us, and have [4] That they did not resounce it entirely, is evident from their ewa creeds and confessions, even from those in which the greatest caution has been employed to concent the principles that rendered their ancestors odious, and to disguise whatever might reader themselves liable to suspicion. For example, they theak in the much pompous terms concerning the dignity, execulence, utility, and divine origin, of civil magistrates; and I am willing to suppose that they speak their real fentiments in this matter. But when they proceed to give reasons that prevent their minuting magifinates into their communion, they discover unwardy the very principles which they are otherwise so kuchous to concess. Thus, in the thirtieth article of the Waterlandian Confession, they declare, that " Jesus Christ has not comprehended the indication of civil magistracy in his formual kingdom, in the church of the New Teltament, nor has he added it to the offices of his church:" The Latin words are: "Pocedacem banc politicam Dominus Jefus in regoo has ipiratuali, eccletia Navi Terlamenti, non inflituit, neque hanc officus eccletis: fun adjunxit." Hence it appears, it the Measures lock upon the church of the New Tellsmeet as a hely republic, maccellible to the wicked, and, confequently, exempt from those indistutions and laws that are necessary to appose the progress of iniquity. Why then do they not beek plainly, when they deliver their doctrine concerning the nature of the church, infant of affecting ambiguty and evadues:

CENT.

almost wholly renounced this fundamental doctrine of their sect, relating to the nature of the Christian church. A dismal experience has convinced them of the absurdity of this chimerical principle, which the dictates of reason, and the declarations of scripture, had demonstrated sufficiently, but without effect. Now, that the Mennonites have opened their eyes, they feem to be pretty generally agreed about the following tenets: First, That there is an invisible church, which is universal in its extent, and is composed of members from all the sects and communities that bear the Christian name: Secondly, That the mark of the true church is not, as their former doctrine supposed, to be sought in the unspotted fanctity of all its members (since they acknowlege that the visible church is promiscuously composed of the righteous and the wicked), but in the knowlege of the truth, as it was delivered by Christ, and in the agreement of all the members of the church in professing and defending it.

XVI. Notwithstanding all this, it is manifest, Their pecu-beyond all possibility of contradiction, that the re-document. ligious opinions which still distinguish the Mennonites from all other Christian communities, flow directly from the ancient doctrine of the Anabaptists concerning the nature of the church. in consequence of this doctrine, that they admit none to the sacrament of baptism, but persons that are come to the full use of their reason; because infants are incapable of binding themselves by a solemn vow to a holy life, and it is altogether uncertain whether, in mature years, they will be faints or sinners. Influenced by the same doctrine, they neither admit civil rulers into their communion, nor allow any of their members to perform the functions of magistracy; for, where there are no malefactors, magistrates are useless. Hence they pretend also to deny the lawfulness of repelling force by force, and consider. GG3

Their pecu-

CENT. XVI. SECT. UI. PART II.

consider war, in all its shapes, as unchristian and unjust; for as those who are perfectly boly, can neither be provoked by injuries, nor commit them, they do not stand in need of the force of arms, either for the purposes of resentment or defence. It is still the same principle that excites in them the utmost aversion to the execution of justice, and more especially to capital punishments; since, according to this principle, there are no transgressions or crimes in the kingdom of Christ, and consequently no occasion for the arm of the judge. Nor can it be imagined, that they should refuse to consum their testimony by an oath upon any other foundation than this, that the perfect members of a holy church can neither dissemble nor deceive. It was certainly then the ancient doctrine of the Anabaptists, concerning the fanctity of the church, that gave rife to the tenets now mentioned, and was the fource of that rigid and severe discipline, which excited such tumults and divisions among the members of that community.

Their fyitem of morality.

XVII. The rules of moral discipline, formerly observed by the Mennonites, were rigorous and austere in the highest degree, and thus every way conformable to the fundamental principle, which has been already mentioned as the source of all their peculiar tenets. It is somewhat doubtful whether these rules still subsist and are respected among them; but it is certain, that in former times their moral precepts were very severe. And indeed it could not well be otherwise: for, when these people had once imbibed a notion that fanctity of manners was the only genuine mark of the true church, it may well be imagined, that they would spare no pains to obtain this honourable character for their sect; and that, for this purpose, they would use the strictest precautions to guard their brethren against disgracing their profession by by immoral practices. Hence it was, that they unanimously, and no doubt justly, exalted the XVI. rules of the Gospel, on account of their transcendent purity. They alleged, that Christ had promulgated a new law of life, far more perfect than that which had been delivered by Moses and the prophets; and they excluded from their communion all such as deviated, in the least, from the most rigorous rules of simplicity and gravity in their looks, their gestures, their clothing, and their table; all whose desires surpassed the dictates of mere necessity; and even all who observed a certain decorum in their manners, and paid a decent regard to the innocent customs of the world. But this primitive austerity is greatly diminished in the more conside. rable sects of the Mennonites, and more especially among the Waterlandians and Germans. The opulence they have acquired, by their industry and commerce, has relaxed their severity, softened their manners, and rendered them less insensible of the fweets of life; so that at this day the Mennonite congregations furnish their pastors with as much matter of censure and admonition as any other Christian community [b]. There are, however, still some remains of the abstinence and severity of manners that prevailed formerly among the Anabaptists; but these are only to be found among some of the smaller sects of that persuasion, and more particularly among those who live remote from great and populous cities.

XVIII. The particular fentiments and opinions The fingular that divided the more considerable societies of the tenes of some seems Mennonites, were those that follow: 1. Menno

[b] It is certain, that the Mennonites in Holland, at this day, are, in their tables, their equipages, and their country seats, the most luxurious part of the Dutch nation. This is more especially true of the Mennonites of Amsterdam, who are very numerous and extremely opulent.

denied

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

denied that Christ derived from his mother the body he assumed; and thought, on the contrary, that it was produced out of nothing, in the womb of that blessed virgin, by the creative power of the Holy Ghost [c]. This opinion is yet firmly maintained by the ancient Flemings or rigid Anabaptists; but has, long since, been renounced by all

[c] This is the account that is given of the opinion of Menno by Herman Schyn, in his Plenior Dedut. Hift. Mennonit. p. 164, which other writers represent in a different mus-After an attentive perusal of several passages in the writings of Menno, where he professedly handles this very fabject, it appears to me more than probable, that he inclined to the opinion attributed to him in the text, and that it was in this sense only, that he supposed Christ to be clothed with a divine and celeftial body. For that may, without any impropriety, be called celeftial and divine, which is produced immediately, in consequence of a creating act, by the Holy Ghot. It must, however, be acknowleded, that Menno does not seen to have been unchangeably wedded to this opinion: for in several places he expresses himself ambiguously on this head, and even sometimes falls into inconsistencies. Hence, perhaps, it may not be unreasonable to conclude, that he renounced indeed the common opinion concerning the origin of Christ's human nature, but was undetermined with respect to the hypothelis, which, among many that were proposed, it was proper to substitute in its place. See Fuellini Centuris I. Epifiolar a Reformator. Helveticis scriptar. p. 3:3.—Be the: as it may, Menno is generally confidered as the author of this opinion concerning the origin of Christ's body, which is the embraced by the more rigid part of his followers. It appears probable, nevertheless, that this opinion was much older than his time, and was only adopted by him with the other teacts of the Anabaptists. As a proof of this, it may be observed, that Bolandus, in his Poem, entitled, Motus Mona !crienfe, lib. x. v.49, plainly declares, that many of the Anabaptifis of Munster (who certainly had not been instructed by Messe) held this very doctrine in relation to Christ's incarnation:

Esse (Chrissum) Deum statuunt alii, sed corpore carnes Humanam sumto sustinuisse negant: At Diam mentem, tenuis quasi fauce canalis, Per Mariz corpus virginis isse ferunt.

XVI. SECT. 1711 PART II.

the other fects of that denomination  $\lceil d \rceil$ . 2. The more austere Mennonites, like their forefathers, not only animadvert, with the most unrelenting feverity, upon actions manifestly criminal, and evidently repugnant to the divine laws, but also treat, in the same manner, the smallest marks of an internal propensity to the pleasures of sense, or of a disposition to comply with the customs of the world. They condemn, for example, elegant dress, rich furniture, every thing, in a word, that looks like ornament, or surpasses the bounds of absolute necessity. Their conduct also to offenders is truly merciless; for they expel them from the church without previous admonition, and never temper the rigour of their judgments by an equitable confideration of the infirmities of nature in this imperfect state. The other Mennonites are by no means chargeable with this severity towards their offending brethren; they exclude none from their communion but the obstinate contemners of the divine laws; nor do they proceed to this extremity even with regard to fuch, until repeated admonitions have proved ineffectual to reform them.—3. The more rigid. Mennonites look upon those that are excommunicated as the pests of society, who are to be avoided upon all occasions, and to be banished from all the comforts of focial intercourse. Neither the voice of nature, nor the ties of blood, are allowed to plead in their behalf, or to procure them

[d] Many writers are of opinion, that the Waterlandians, of all the other Anabaptists, shewed the strongest propensity to adopt the doctrine of Menno, relating to the origin of Christ's body. See Histoire des Anabaptistes, p. 223.—Ceremonies et Coutumes de tous les Peuples du Monde, tome iv. p. 200. But that these writers are mistaken, is abundantly manifest from the public Confession of Faith of the Waterlandians, composed by John de Ries. See also, for a farther resutation of this mistake, Herm. Schyn's Deductio Plenior Histor. Mennonit. p. 165.

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART II.

the smallest degree of indulgence. In such a case the exchange of good offices, the sweets of friendly conversation, and the mutual effusions of tenderness and love, are cruelly suspended, even between parents and children, husbands and wives, and also in all the other endearing relations of human life.-But the more moderate branches of this community have wifely rejected this unnatural discipline, and look upon the honour and fanctity of the church to be sufficiently vindicated, when its members avoid a close and particular intimacy with those who have been expelled from its communion. 4. The rigid Anabaptists enjoin it as an obligation upon their disciples, and the members of their community, to wash the feet of their guests as a token of brotherly love and affection, and in obedience to the example of Christ; which they suppose, in this case, to have the force of a positive command; and hence they are sometimes called Podonipta. But the other Mennonites deny that Christ meant, in this instance of his goodness and condescension, to recommend this custom to the imitation of his followers, or to give his example, in this case, the authority of a positive precept.

The flate of learning and philosophy among the Anabaptifts.

XIX. The Anabaptists, however divided on other subjects, agreed in their notions of learning and philosophy, which, in former times, they unanimously considered as the pests of the Christian church, and as highly detrimental to the progress of true religion and virtue. Hence it happened, that among a considerable number of writers who, in this century, employed their pens in the defence of that sect, there is not one whose labours bear any inviting marks of learning or genius. The rigid Mennonites persevere still in the barbarous system of their ancestors, and, neglecting the improvement of the mind and the culture of the sciences, devote themselves entirely to trade, manual industry, and the mechanic arts. The Waterlandians, in- CENT. deed, are honourably distinguished from all the section, other Anabaptists, in this, as well as in many other PART II. respects. For they permit several members of their community to frequent the public universities, and there to apply themselves to the study of languages, history, antiquities, and more especially of physic, whose utility and importance they do not pretend to deny; and hence it happens, that, in our times, so many pastors among the Mennonites assume the title and profession of physicians. It is not unusual to see Anabaptists of this more humane and moderate class engaged even in philosophical researches, to the excellence and advantages of which their eyes are, at length, so far opened, as to make them acknowlege their importance to the wellbeing of fociety. It was, no doubt, in consequence of this change of sentiment that they erected, not long ago, a public seminary of learning at Amsterdam, in which there is always a person of eminent abilities chosen as professor of philosophy. But, though these moderate Anabaptists acknowlege the benefit that may be derived to civil fociety from the culture of philosophy and the sciences, they still persist so far in their ancient prejudices, as to deem theology a system that has no connexion with them; and, consequently, they are of opinion, that in order to preserve it pure and untainted, the utmost caution must be used not to blend the dictates of philosophy with the doctrines of religion. It is farther to be observed, that, in the present times, even the Flemish or rigid Anabaptists begin gradually to divest themselves of their antipathy to learning, and allow their brethren to apply themselves to the study of languages, history, the and sciences.

CENT.
XVI.

SECT. III.

PART II.

Their divifion into a multitude of lects.

XX. That simplicity and ignorance, of which the ancient Anabaptists boasted, as the guardians of their piety and the sources of their felicity, contributed principally to the divisions that prevailed among them, from even their first rise, in a degree unknown and unprecedented in any other Christian community. This will appear evident to such as enquire, with the smallest attention, into the more immediate causes of their dissensions. For it is observable, that their most vehement contests had not for their object any difference in opinion concerning the doctrines or mysteries of religion, but generally turned upon matters relating to the conduct of life, on what was lawful, decent, just, and pious, in actions and manners, and what, on the contrary, was to be considered as criminal, indecorous, unjust, or impious. These disputes were a natural consequence of their fayourite principle, that boliness of life, and purity of manners, were the authentic marks of the true church. But the misfortune lay here, that, being ignorant themfelves, and under the guidance of persons whose knowlege was little superior to theirs, they were unacquainted with the true method of determining, in a multitude of cases, what was pious, laudable and lawful, and what was impious, unbecoming, and criminal. The criterion they employed for this purpose was neither the decision of right reason, nor the authority of the divine laws, accurately interpreted, fince their ignorance rendered them incapable of using these means of arriving at the truth. They judged, therefore, of these matters by the fuggestions of fancy, and the opinions of others. But as this method of discerning between right and wrong, decent and indecent, was extremely uncertain and precarious, and could not but produce 2 variety of decisions, according to the different feelings, fancies, tempers, and capacities of different perfors, persons, hence naturally arose diversity of sentiments, debates, and contests of various kinds. These debates produced schisms, which are never more easily excited, or more obstinately fomented and perpetuated, than where ignorance, the true fource of bigotry, prevails.

CENT.

XXI. The Mennonites, after having been long The first in an uncertain and precarious situation, obtained solid settlea fixed and unmolested settlement in the United Mennonites Provinces, under the shade of a legal toleration United procured for them by William, prince of Orange, Provinces. the glorious founder of Belgic liberty. This illustrious chief, who acted from principle in allowing liberty of conscience and worship to Christians of different denominations, was moreover engaged, by gratitude, to favour the Mennonites, who had affisted him, in the year 1572, with a considerable fum of money, when his coffers were almost exhausted [e]. The fruits, however, of this toleration, were not immediately enjoyed by all the Anabaptists that were dispersed through the different provinces of the rifing republic; for, in feveral places, both the civil magistrates and the clergy made a long and obstinate opposition to the will of the prince in this matter; particularly in the province of Zealand and the city of Amsterdam, where the plots formed by the Anabaptists, and the tumults they had excited, were still remembered by the people with horror [f]. This opposition, indeed, was in a great measure conquered before the conclusion of this century, partly by the resolution and influence of William the First, and his fon Maurice, and partly by the exemplary con.

[e] See Brandt, Historie der Reformatie in de Nederlande, vol. i. p. 525.—Ceremonies et Coutumes de tous les Peuples du Monde, tome iv. p. 201.

[f] Brandt, loc. cit. book xi. p. 555. 586. 609. book xiv. p. 780. book xvi. p. 811.

CENT. duct of the Mennonites, who manifested their zerlous attachment to the republic on several occasions, and redoubled, instead of diminishing, the pre-cautions which were calculated to remove all grounds of suspicion, and take from their adversaries every pretext which could render their opposition justifiable. But it was not before the following century, that their liberty and tranquillity were fixed upon folid foundations, when, by a Confession of Faith, published in the year 1626, they cleared themselves from the imputation of those pernicious and detestable errors that had been laid to their charge [ ].

The English Assbeptifis.

XXII. The sectaries in England, who reject the custom of baptizing infants, are not distinguished by the title of Anabaptists, but by that of Baptists. It is, however, probable, that they derive their origin from the German and Dutch Mennonites; and that, in former times, they adopted their doctrine in all its points. That, indeed, is by no means the case at present; for the English Baptists differ, in many things, both from the ancient and modern Mennonites. They are divided into two fects. The members of one fect are distinguished by the denomination of General or Arminian Baptists, on account of their rejection of the doctrine of absolute and unconditional decrees; and the others are called Particular or Calvinifical Baptists, from the striking resemblance of their religious system to that of the presbyterians, who have Calvin for their chief [b]. The Baptills of the latter fect fettled chiefly at London, and in the towns and villages adjacent; and they have departed so far from the tenets of their ancestors, that, at this day, they retain no more of the pecu- CENT. liar doctrines and institutions of the Mennonites, than the administration of baptism by immersion, PART and the refusal of that sacrament to infants, and those of tender years. And consequently they have none of those scruples relating to oaths, wars, and the functions of magistracy, that still remain among even the most rational part of the modern Mennonites. They observe in their congregations the same rules of government, and the same forms of worship, that are followed by the presbyterians;. and their community is under the direction of men eminent for their piety and learning [i]. From their Confession of Faith, published in the year 1643, it appears plainly, that their religious sentiments were then the same as they are at this day [k].

[g] See Herm. Schyn's Plenior Dedulio Hifter. Manual cap. iv. p. 79.

[b] See Whifton's Memoirs of his Life and Writings, 501. ii. p. 461.

XXIII. The General Baptists, or, as they are Theopinions called by some, the Antipædobaptists, are dispersed of the General and in great numbers though several counties of Particular England, and are, for the most part, persons of in England. mean condition, and almost totally destitute of learning and knowlege. This latter circumstance will appear less surprising, when it is considered, that, like the ancient Mennonites, they profess a contempt of erudition and science. There is much latitude in their system of religious doctrine, which consists in such vague and general principles, as render their communion accessible to Christians of almost all denominations. And, accordingly, they tolerate, in fact, and receive among them, persons of every sect, even Socinians and Arians; nor do they reject, from their communion, any who profess themselves Christians, and receive the Holy Scriptures as the fource of truth, and the rule of faith [1]. They agree with the Particular Baptists in this circumstance, that they admit to baptism adult persons only, and administer that facrament by dipping or total immersion; but they differ from them in another respect, that is, in their repeating the administration of baptism to those who had received it, either in a state of infancy, or by aspersion, instead of dipping; for, if the common accounts may be believed, the Particular Baptists do not carry matters so far. The following fentiments, rites, and tenets, are also peculiar to the former: 1. After the manner of the ancient Mennonites, they look upon their sect 25 the only true Christian church, and consequently shun, with the most scrupulous caution, the communion of all other religious focieties. 2. They dip only once (and not three times, as is practifed elsewhere,) the candidates for baptism, and consider it as a matter of indifference, whether that facrament be administered in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, or in that of Christ alone. 3. They adopt the doctrine of Menno with respect to the Millennium, or the reign of <sup>[1]</sup> This appears evidently from their Confession of Faith, which appeared first in the year 1660, was re-published by Mr. Whiston, in the Memoirs of his Life, vol. ii. p. 561. and is drawn up with such latitude, that, with the removal and alteration of a sew points*, it may be adopted by Christians of all denominations †. Mr. Whiston, though an Arian, became a member of this Baptist community, which, as he thought, came nearest to the simplicity of the primitive and apostolic age. The samous Mr. Enlyn, who was persecuted on account of his Socinian principles, joined himself also to this society, and died in their communion.

[2] Bibliotheque Britannique, tom. vi. p. 3.

[i] See a German work composed by Ant. William Bohm, under the title of the History of the Reformation in England, p. 151. 473. 536. 1152.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

For Viz. Those relating to universal redemption, the perseverance of the faints, election and reprobation, which are illustrated entirely on Arminian principes, and consequently cannot be embraced by rigid Caivinists; not to mention the points relating to baptism, which are the diffinctive marks of this sect.

the large class; for then his affertion would not be true.

the faints with Christ upon earth for a thousand years. CENT. 4. Many of them embrace his particular opinion concerning the origin of Christ's body [m]. 5. They PART II. look upon the precept of the apostles, prohibiting the use of blood, and things strangled [n], as a law that was designed to be in force in all ages and periods of the church. 6. They believe that the foul, from the moment that the body dies until its refurrection at the last day, remains in a state of perfect insensibility. 7. They use the ceremony of extreme unction. And, to omit matters of a more trifling nature, 8. Several of them observe the Jewish, well as the Christian Sabbath [0]. These Bapnists have three different classes of ecclesiastical governors, bishops, elders, and deacons; the first of these, among whom there have been several learned men [p], they modestly call messens [q], as St. John is known to have styled that order, in the book of the Revelations.

XXIV. Before we conclude the history of the The David-Anabaptists, it may not be improper to mention ists, or Daa very singular and ridiculous sect that was giana. founded by David George, a native of Delft, and a member of that community. This enthufiast, after having laid the foundation of the sect of the Davidists, or David-Georgians, deserted the Anabaptists, and removed to Basil in Switzerland, in the year 1544, where he changed his name, and, by the liberality and splendour that attended his [#] Acts xv. 29.

[] See Whiston's Memoirs of bis Life, vol. ii. p. 466. as also Crolby's History of the English Baptists, published in four wolumes 8vo, in the year 1728.

[q] St. John calls them the angels of the churches; the word engel (in Greek ay 1006) fignifies properly an engey or meffenger. opulence, HH TOL. IV.

[m] Namely, that the body of Jesus was not derived from the lubstance of the blessed Virgin, but was created in her womb by an omnipotent act of the Holy Spirit.

[o] These accounts of the doctrine of the Baptists are taken from Wall's History of Infant-Baptism, vol. ii. and also from the second volume of Whiston's Memoirs of bis Life.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

opulence, joined to his probity and purity of manners, acquired a very high degree of esteem, which he preserved till his death. The lustre of his reputation was, however, but transitory; for, soon after his decease, which happened in the year 1556, his son-in-law, Nicholas Blesdyck, charged him with having maintained the most blasphemous and pestilential errors. The senate of Basil, before whom this accusation was brought, being satisfied with the evidence by which it was supported, pronounced sentence against the deceased heretic, and ordered his body to be dug up and publicly burned. And indeed, nothing more horridly impious and extravagant can polfibly be conceived, than the sentiments and tenes of this fanatic, if they were really such as they have been represented, either by his accusers or his historians. For he is said to have given himself out for the Son of God, the Fountain of divine wisdom, to have denied the existence of angels, good and evil, of heaven and hell, and to have rejected the doctrine of a future judgment; and he is also charged with having trampled upon all the rules of decency and modesty with the utmost contempt [r]. In all this, however, there may be much exaggeration. The enthusiast in question, though a man of some natural genius, was, nevertheles, totally destitute of learning of every kind, and had something obscure, harsh, and illiberal in his manner of expression, that gave too much

occation

[r] See Nic. Blesdyckii Historia Davidis Georgii à Jacobo Revio edita; as also the life of the same fanatic, written in the German language, by Stoltersorth. Among the modern writers, see Arnold's Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, tom. i. p. 750. tom. ii. p. 534. & 1183. in which there are several things that tend to clear the character of David. See also Henr. Mori Enthesiasmus Triumphatus, sect. xxxiii. p. 23;—And the documents I have published in relation to this matter, in the History of Sorvetus, p. 425.

CENT.

casion to an unfavourable interpretation of his ligious tenets. That he had both more sense id more virtue than he is generally supposed to we possessed, appears manifestly, not only from s numerous writings, but also from the simplicity ad candour that were visible in the temper and irit of the disciples he left behind him, of whom veral are yet to be found in Holftein, Friseland, nd other countries [s]. He deplored the decline f vital and practical religion, and endeavoured to fore it among his followers; and in this he seem-1 to imitate the example of the more moderate nabaptists. But the excessive warmth of an iregular imagination threw him into illusions of the 10st dangerous and pernicious kind, and seduced im into a persuasion that he was honoured with the ift of divine inspiration, and had celestial visions onstantly presented to his mind. Thus was he ed to such a high degree of fanaticism, that, re-Eting as mean and useless the external services of iety, he reduced religion to contemplation, silence, nd a certain frame or habit of foul, which it is qually difficult to define and to understand. The paring Mystics and the visionary Quakers, may herefore, if they please, give David George a disnguished rank in their enthusiastical community.

XXV. Henry Nicholas, a Westphalian, one of the Family ne intimate companions of this fanatic, though of Love, founded mewhat different from him in the nature of his Henry Ninthusiasm, and also in point of genius and chaacter, founded a sect in Holland, in the year 1555, which he called the Family of Love. The princiles of this fect were afterwards propagated in England, and produced no small confusion in both countries. The judgment that has been formed with respect to David George may be applied with truth, at least, in a great measure, to his asfociate Nicholas, who, perhaps, would have prevented a considerable part of the heavy reproaches with which he has been loaded, had he been endowed with a degree of genius, difcernment, and knowledge, sufficient to enable him to express his fentiments with perspicuity and elegance. that as it may, the character, temper, and views of this man may be learned from the spirit that reigned in his flock [t]. As to his pretentions, they were, indeed, visionary and chimerical; for he maintained, that he had a commission from heaven, to teach men that the effence of religion consisted in the feelings of divine love; that all other theological tenets, whether they related to objects of faith, or modes of worship, were of no moment; and consequently, that it was a matter of perfect indifference, what opinions Christians entertained concerning the divine nature, provided their hearts burned with the pure and facred flame of piety and love. To this, his main doctrine, Nicholas may have probably added other odd fancies, as always is the case with those innovators, who are endued with a warm and fruitful imagination; to obtain, however, a true notion of the opinions of this enthusiast, it will be much more adviseable to confult his own writings, than to depend entirely upon the accounts and refutations of his adversaries  $\lceil u \rceil$ .

[s] See Jo. Molleri Introduct. in Histor. Chersones. Cimbrica, P. II. p. 116. & his Cimbria Literata, tom. i. p. 422.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

[t] See Jo. Hornbeck, Summa Controvers. lib. vi. p. 993.—Arnold, Kirchen-und Ketzer Historie, p. 746.—Bohm's History of the Reformation in England (written in German), book is.

ch. v. p. 541.

[u] The most learned of all the authors who wrote against the Family of Love, was Dr. Henry More, in his Grand Explanation of the Mystery of Goddiness, &c. book vi. ch. 12.—18. George Fox, the sounder of the sect of Quakers, inveighed also severely against this seraphic Family, and called them a motley tribe of Fanatics, because they took ouths, danced, sang, and made merry. See Sewell's History of the Quakers, book iii. p. 88, 89. 344.

CHAP. IV.

The History of the Socinians.

I. THE Socinians are faid to have derived this denomination from the illustrious family denomination from the illustrious family of the Sozzini, which flourished a long time at Sienna in Tuscany, and produced several great and eminent men, and among others Lælius and mination Faustus Socinus, who are commonly supposed to and origin have been the founders of this sect. The former was the son of Marianus, a famous lawyer, and was himself a man of uncommon genius and learning; to which he added, as his very enemies are obliged to acknowlege, the lustre of a virtuous life and of unblemished manners. obliged to leave his country, in the year 1547, on account of the difgust he had conceived against popery, he travelled through France, England, Holland, Germany, and Poland, in order to examine the religious fentiments of those who had thrown off the yoke of Rome, and thus at length to come at the truth. After this he settled at Zurich, where he died in the year 1562, before he had arrived at the fortieth year of his age [w]. His mild and gentle disposition rendered him averse from whatever had the air of contention and discord. He adopted the Helvetic confession of faith, and professed himself a member of the church of Switzerland; but this did not induce him to conceal entirely the doubts he had formed in relation to certain points of religion, and which he communicated, in effect, by letter, to some learned men, whose judgment he respected, of this fect.

[w] Cloppenburg, Dissertatio de origine et progressu Socinianismi.—Jo. Hornbeck, Summa Controversiarum, p. 563.—Jo. Henr. Hottinger, Hift. Eccles. tom. ix. p. 417.

and

CENT. XVI. SBCT. III.

and in whose friendship he could confide [x] His sentiments were indeed propagated, in a more public manner, after his death; since Faustus, his nephew and his heir, is supposed to have drawn, from the papers he left behind him, that religious system upon which the Socinian sect was founded.

The term " Socinian," bears different fignificatiops.

II. It is, however, to be observed, that this denomination does not always convey the same ideas, fince it is susceptible of different fignifications, and is, in effect, used sometimes in a more strict and proper, and at others in a more improper and extensive sense. For, according to the usual manner of speaking, all are termed Socinians, whose sentiments bear a certain affinity to the syltem of Socinus; and they are more especially ranked in that class, who either boldly deny, or artfully explain away, the doctrines that affert the Divine Nature of Christ, and a Trinity of persons in the Godhead. But, in a strict and proper fense, they only are deemed the members of this fect, who embrace wholly, or with a few exceptions, the form of theological doctrine, which Faustus Socinus either drew up himself or received from his uncle, and delivered to the Unitarian brethren, or Socinians, in Poland and Trassylvania [y].

The origin jlm.

III. The origin of Socinianism may be traced to of Sociains, the earliest period of the Reformation. For scarcely had [x] Zanchius, Praf. ad Libr. de tribus Elebim.-Beza, Epist. lxxxi. p. 167. Certain writings are attributed to him by Sandius, in his Bibliotheca Anti-Triniter. but it is very doubtful whether he was the real author of them.

[y] We have, hitherto, no complete or accurate history either of the sect called Sociains, or of Lzlius and Faustus Socinus, its founders; nor any fatisfactory account of those who laboured principally with them, and, after them, in giving a permanent and stable form to this community. For the had that happy revolution in the state of religion CENT. taken place, when a set of men, fond of extremes, XVI. and consequently disposed to look upon as erroneous whatever had hitherto been taught and professed in the church of Rome, began to undermine the doctrine of Christ's Divinity, and the other truths that are connected with it, and proposed reducing the whole of religion to practical piety and virtue. The efforts of these men were opposed with united zeal and vigilance by the Romish, Reformed, and Lutheran churches; and their designs were so far disconcerted, as to prevent their forming themselves and their followers into a regular and permanent sect. So early as the year 1524, the divinity of Christ was openly denied by Louis Hetzer, one of the wandering and fanatical Anabaptists, who, about three years afterwards, suffered death at Constance [2]. There were not wanting, among the first Anabaptists, several persons who entertained the opinions of Hetzer; though it would be manifestly unof Hetzer; though it would be manifestly unaccounts we have of the Socinians, and their principal doctors, from Hornbeck (1), Calovius (2), Cloppenburg (3), Sandius (4), Lubieniecius (5), and Lauterbach (6), are far from being proper to satisfy the curiosity of those, who desire something more than a vague and superficial knowledge of this matter. The history of Socinianism, that was published at Paris by Lami in the year 1723, is a wretched compilation from the most common-place writers on that subject; it is also sull of errors, and is loaded with a variety of matters that have no fort of relation to the history of Socinus, or to the doctrine he taught. The very learned and laborious La Croze promised, in his Dissertations Historiques, tom. i. p. 142. a complete History of Socinianism, from its origin to the present times, but did not sulfil this interesting engagement.

[z] Sandii Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitar.—Jo. Bapt. Ottius, Annal. Anabaptist. p. 50.—Breitingeri Museum Helveticum, tom. v. p. 391. tom. vi. p. 100.479.

<sup>(1)</sup> In his Socinianism. Consutat. vol. i.—(2) In his Opera Anti-Sociniana.—(3) In his Different. de origine et progressu Socinianismi, tom. ii. op.—(4) In his Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitariorum.——(5) In his Historia Resormationis Polonicæ.——(6) In his Ariano-Socinismus, published in German at Francsort in the year 1725.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

fair to lay these opinions to the charge of the whole community. But it was not only from that quarter that erroneous opinions were propagated in relation to the points already mentioned; others feemed to have been seized with the contagion, and it manifested itself from day to day in several countries. John Campanus, a native of Juliers, disseminated, at Wittenberg and other places, various tenets of an heretical aspect; and taught, among other things, that the Son was inferior to the Father, and that the Holy Ghost was not the title of a divine person, but a denomination used to denote the nature of the Father and of the Son; and thus did this innovator revive, in a great measure, the errors of the ancient Arians [a]. A doctrine of a fimilar kind was propagated, in the year 1530, in Switzerland, Augsburgh, and among the Grisons, by a person, whose name was Claudius, who, by his opposition to the doctrine of Christ's divinity, excited no small commotions in these countries [b]. But none of these new teachers were so far encouraged by the number of their followers, or the indulgence of their adversaries, as to be in a condition to form a regular sect.

Michael Bervetus. IV. The attempts of Michael Servede [c], or Servetus, a Spanish physician, were much

[a] See the Differtation de Job. Campano, Anti-Trinitario, in the Amanitates Literaria of the very learned Schelhornius, tom. xi. p. 1—92.

[b] See Schelhornii Dissert. Epistol. de Mino Celso Senens, Claudio item Allobroge, homine Fanatico et SS. Trinitatis hoste, Ulma, 1748, iu 4to.—Jac. Breitingeri Museum Helvetic. tom vii. p. 667.—Jo. Hallerus, Epistol. in Jo. Conrad. Fueslin, Cen-turia Epistolar. Viror. Eruditor. p. 140.

[c] By taking away the last syllable of this name (I mean the Spanish termination de) there remains Scroe, which, by relacing differently the letters that compose it, makes Reves. Servetus assumed this latter name in the title-pages of all his books. He also called himself sometimes Michael Villanovanus, or Villanovanus alone, after the place of his nativity, omitting the name of his family.

more

Calvin,

more alarming to those who had the cause of true religion at heart, than the feeble and impotent efforts of the innovators now mentioned. This man, who made so great a noise in the world, was born at Villa Nueva, in the kingdom of Arragon, distinguished himself by the superiority of his genius, and had made a confiderable progress in various branches of science. In the years 1531 and 1532, he published, in Latin, his seven books concerning the errors that are contained in the doctrine of the Trinity, and his Two Dialogues on the same subject, in which he attacked, in the most audacious manner, the sentiments adopted by far the greatest part of the Christian church, in relation to the Divine Nature, and a Trinity of persons in the Godhead. Some years after this he traveled into France, and, after a variety of adventures, settled at Vienne in Dauphiné, where he applied himself, with success, to the practice of physic. It was here, that, letting loose the reins of his warm and irregular imagination, he invented that strange system of theology, which was printed, in a clandestine manner, in the year 1553, under the title of Christianity restored. He seemed to be seized with a passion for reforming (in his way); and many things concurred to favour his designs, such as the fire of his genius, the extent of his learning, the power of his eloquence, the strength of his resolution, the obstinacy of his temper, and an external appearance, at least, of piety, that rendered all the rest doubly engaging. Add to all this, the protection and friendship of many persons of weight, in France, Germany, and Italy, which Servetus had obtained by his talents and abilities both natural and acquired; and it will appear, that few innovators have fet out with a better prospect of success. But, notwithstanding these signal advantages, all his views were totally disappointed by the vigilance and severity of

The History of the Socinians.

CENT. XVI. BECT. III. PART II. Calvin, who, when Servetus had escaped from his prison at Vienne, and was passing through Switzerland, in order to feek refuge in Italy, caused him to be apprehended at Geneva, in the year 1553, and had an accusation of blasphemy brought against him before the council [d]. The issue of this accusation was fatal to Servetus, who, adhering resolutely to the opinions he had embraced, was, by a public sentence of the court, declared an obstinate heretic, and condemned to the flames. For it is observable, that, at this time, the ancient laws that had been enacted against heretics by the emperor Frederic II. and had been so frequently renewed after his reign, were still in vigour at Geneva. It must, however be acknowleged, that this learned and ingenious fufferer was worthy of a better fate; though it is certain, on the other hand, that his faults were neither few nor trivial; since it is well known, that his excessive arrogance was accompanied with a malignant and contentious spirit, an invincible obstinacy of temper, and a confiderable portion of fanaticism  $\lceil e \rceil$ .

V. The

[d] This accusation was brought against Servetus by a person, who lived in Calvin's family as a servant; and this circumstance displeased many.

[e] Dr. Mosheim refers the reader here, in a note, to an ample and curious history of Servetus, composed by him in the German language, of which the first edition was published at Helmstaat, in 4to, in the year 1748, and the second, with considerable additions, at the same place, the year following. Those who are not acquainted with the German language, will find a full account of this singular man, and of his extraordinary history, in a Latin differtation, composed under the inspection of Dr. Mosheim, and published at Helmstadt us. following title: Historia Michaelis der the quam, Preside Jo. I.aur. Moshemio, placido Dosterum ex-amini publice exponit Henricus ab Allwaerden. There is an accurate history of this unhappy man in the first volume of the work, entitled, Memoirs of Literature, containing a Weekly Account of the State of Learning, both at bome and abroad.

V. The religious system that Servetus had CENT. truck out of a wild and irregular fancy, was, in- XVI. leed, singular in the highest degree. The greatest part of it was a necessary consequence of his neculiar notions concerning the universe, the na- trine of Setture of God, and the nature of things, which were equally strange and chimerical. Thus it is difficult to unfold, in a few words, the doctrine of this unhappy man; nor, indeed, would any detail render it intelligible in all its branches. He took it into his head that the true and genuine doctrine of Christ had been entirely lost, even before the council of Nice; and he was, moreover, of opinion, that it had never been delivered with a sufficient degree of precision and perspicuity in any period of the church. To these extravagant assertions he added another still more so, even that he himself had received a commission from above to reveal anew this divine doctrine, an i to explain it to mankind. His notions with respect to the Supreme Being, and a Trinity of persons in the Godhead, were obscure and chimerical beyond all measure, and amounted in general to the follow-abroad. This was composed by Monsieur de la Roche, and was afterwards augmented by him, and translated into French in his Bibliotheque Angloise, tom. ii. p. I. article vii. p. 76.—

There is also an account of Servetus given by Mackenzie, in the first volume of his Lives and Charatters of the most eminent Writers of the Scotish nation, which was published at Edinburgh in the year 1708. To these we may add An Impartial History of Servetus, &c. written by an anonymous author, and published

It is impossible to justify the conduct of Calvin in the case of Servetus, whose death will be an indelible reproach upon the character of that great and eminent reformer. The only thing that can be alleged, not to efface, but to diminish his crime, is, that it was no easy matter for him to divest himself at once of that persecuting spirit, which had been so long nourished and strengthened by the popular religion in which he was educated. It was a remaining portion of the spirit of popery in the breast of Calvin that kindled his unchristian zeal against the wretched Servetus.

CENT. XVI. RECT. III. PART II.

ing propositions: That " the Deity, before the crea" tion of the world, had produced within himself "two personal representations, or manners of exist-" ence [f], which were to be the medium of inter-" course between him and mortals, and by whom, "consequently, he was to reveal his will, and to "display his mercy and beneficence to the chil-" dren of men; that these two representatives were " the Word and the Holy Ghost; that the former " was united to the man Christ; who was born of "the Virgin Mary by an omnipotent act of the "divine will; and that, on this account, Christ " might be properly called God; that the Hely "Spirit directed the course, and animated the "whole system of nature; and more especially produced in the minds of men wise counsels, "virtuous propenfities, and divine feelings; and, "finally, that these two representations were to "cease after the destruction of this terrestrial " globe, and to be absorbed into the substance of "the Deity, from which they had been formed." This is, at least, a general sketch of the doctrine of Servetus, who, however, did not always explain his system in the same manner, nor take any pains to avoid inconsistencies and contradictions; and who frequently expressed himself in fuch ambiguous terms, that it is extremely difficult to learn from them his true fentiments. His fystem of morality agreed in many circumstances with that of the Anabaptists, whom he also imitated in censuring, with the utmost severity, the custom of Infant-Baptism.

Other Au ti-Trinita-

VI. The pompous plans of reformation, that had been formed by Servetus, were not only disconcerted, but even fell into oblivion, after the

These representations, or manners of existence, Servetus also called economies, dispensations, dispositions, &c. for he oft n changed his terms in unfolding his visionary system.

leath of their author. He was, indeed, according CENT. vulgar report, supposed to have left behind xVI. him a considerable number of disciples; and we PART II. find, in the writings of the doctors of this century, many complaints and apprehensions that seem to confirm this supposition, and would persuade us, that Servetus had really founded a fect; yet, when this matter is attentively examined, there will appear just reason to doubt, whether this man left behind him any one person that might properly be called his true disciple. For those who were denominated Servetians by the theological writers of this century, not only differed from Servetus in many points of doctrine, but also varied widely from him in his doctrine of the Trinity, which was the peculiar and distinguishing point of his theological system. Valentine Gentili, a Neapolitan, who suffered death at Bern, in the year 1566, adopted the Arian hypothesis, and not that of Servetus, as many writers have imagined; for his only error confifted in this, that he considered the Son and the Holy Ghost as subordinate to the Father [g]. Nearly allied to this, was the doctrine of Matthew Gribaldi, a lawyer, whom a timely death, in the year 1566, faved from the severity of an ecclesiastical tribunal, that was ready to pronounce sentence against him on account of his errors; for he supposed the divine nature divided into three eternal spirits, which were distinguished from each other, not only by number, but also by subordination  $\lceil h \rceil$ . It is not so easy to determine the particular charge that was brought against Alciat, a native of Piedmont, and Sylvester Tellius, who were banished from the city and territory of Geneva, in the year 1559; nor do we know, with certainty, the errors that were embraced by Paruta, Leonardo, and others [i], who were ranked among the followers of Servetus. is, however, more than probable, that none of the persons now mentioned were the disciples of Servetus, or adopted the hypothesis of that visionary innovator. The same thing may be affirmed with respect to Gonesius, who is said to have embraced the doctrine of that unhappy man, and to have introduced it into Poland [k]; for, though he maintained some opinions that really resembled it in some of its points, his manner of explaining the mystery of the Trinity was totally different from that of Servetus.

[g] See Bayle's Dictionary — Spon's Hist. de Geneve, tom. ii. p. 80.—Sandii Biblioth. Auti-Trinit. p. 26.—Lamy's Histoire du Socinianisme, part II. ch. vi. p. 251.—Fuest. Reformations Beytrage, tom. v. p. 381.

[b] Sandii Biblioth. Anti-Trinit. p. 17.—Lamy, loc. cit. part II. ch. vii. p. 257.—Spon, loc. cit. tom. ii. p. 85. not.—Haller, in Museo Tigurino, tom. ii. p. 114.

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. FART II.

Erroncous

accounts of the origin of Socinization.

VII. It is evident that none of the persons, now mentioned, professed that form or system of theo-

[i] For an account of these, and other persons of the same class, see Sandius. Lamy, and also Lubieniecius' Historia Reformat. Polonica, lib. ii. cap. v. p. 96.—There is a particular and ample account of Alciat given by Bayle, in the sink volume of his Dillionary; see also Spon, loc. cit. tom. ii. p. 85, 86.

[k] This is affirmed upon the authority of Wissowatius and Lubieniecius; but the very words of the latter will be sufficient to shew us upon what grounds. These words (Hist. Reformat. Polon. cap. vi. p. 111.) are as follow: " Is Serveti sententian de præ-eminentia patris in patriam attulit, eamque non diffimulavit," i. e. Gonesius introduced into Polund the opinion embraced by Servetus in relation to the pre-eminence of the Father, and was by no means studious to conceal it. - Who now does not see, that, if it was the pre-eminence of the Father that Gonesius maintained, he must have differed considerably from Servetus, whose doctrine removed all real distinction in the divine nature? The reader will do well to confult Sandius (loc. cit. p. 40.) concerning the sentiments of Gonesius; since it is from this writer, that Lamy has borrowed the greatest part of what he has advanced in his Histoire de Sociaianisme, tem. ii. chap. x. p. 278.

logical

ogical dectrine, that is properly called Socinianism, CENT. he origin of which is, by the writers of that sect, lated from the year 1546, and placed in Italy. These writers tell us, that, in this very year, above forty persons eminently distinguished by their learning and genius, and still more by their generous zeal for truth, held secret assemblies, at different times, in the territory of Venice, and particularly at Vicenza, in which they deliberated concerning a general reformation of the received systems of religion, and, in a more especial manner, undertook to refute the peculiar doctrines that were afterwards publicly rejected by the Socinians. They tell us farther, that the principal members of this clandestine society, were Lælius Socinus, Alciat, Ochino, Paruta, and Gentili; that their design was divulged, and their meetings were discovered, by the temerity and imprudence of some of their associates; that two of them were apprehended and put to death; while the rest, being dispersed, sought a resuge in Switzerland, Germany, Moravia, and other countries; and that Socinus, after having wandered up and down in several parts of Europe, went into Poland, first in the year 1551, and afterwards in 1558, and there sowed the seeds of his doctrine, which grew apace, and produced a rich and abundant harvest [1]. Such is

<sup>[1]</sup> See the Bibliotheca Anti-Trinit (p. 18. & 25) of Sandius, who mentions some writings that are supposed to have been published by the clandestine society of pretended reformers at Venice and Vicenza; though the truth of this supposition is extremely dubious;—Andr. Wissowatii Narratio quomodo in Polonia Reformati ab Unitariis separati sunt, which is subjoined to the Biblioth. of Sandius, p. 209.—The reader may likewise consult Lubieniecius, (Histor. Reformat. Polon. lib. ii. cap. i. p. 38.) who intimates, that he took this account of the origin of Socinianism from the manuscript Commentaries of Budzinus, and his Life of Lælius Socinus. See also Sam. Przipcoviwe, in Vita Socini

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II. and in whose friendship he could conside [x] His sentiments were indeed propagated, in a more public manner, after his death; since Faustus, his nephew and his heir, is supposed to have drawn, from the papers he left behind him, that religious system upon which the Socinian sect was founded.

The term "Socialan," beam different fignifications.

II. It is, however, to be observed, that this denomination does not always convey the fame ideas, fince it is susceptible of different fignifications, and is, in effect, used sometimes in a more strict and proper, and at others in a more improper and extensive sense. For, according to the usual manner of speaking, all are termed Socinians, whose sentiments bear a certain affinity to the syltem of Socinus; and they are more especially ranked in that class, who either boldly deny, or artfully explain away, the doctrines that affert the Divine Nature of Christ, and a Trinity of persons in the Godhead. But, in a strict and proper sense, they only are deemed the members of this fect, who embrace wholly, or with a few exceptions, the form of theological doctrine, which Faustus Socinus either drew up himself or received from his uncle, and delivered to the Unitarian brethren, or Socinians, in Poland and Tranfylvania [ y ].

The origin III. The origin of Socinianism may be traced to of Socinian, the earliest period of the Reformation. For scarcely itm.

[x] Zanchius, Praf. ad Libr. de tribus Elobim.— Beza, Epist. lxxxi. p. 167. Certain writings are attributed to him by Sandius, in his Bibliotheca Anti-Triniter. but it is very doubtful whether he was the real author of them.

[y] We have, hitherto, no complete or accurate history either of the sect called Socinians, or of Lælius and Faustus Socinus, its founders; nor any satisfactory account of those who laboured principally with them, and, after them, in giving a permanent and stable form to this community. For the accounts had that happy revolution in the state of religion CENT. taken place, when a fet of men, fond of extremes, and consequently disposed to look upon as erroneous whatever had hitherto been taught and professed in the church of Rome, began to undermine the doctrine of Christ's Divinity, and the other truths that are connected with it, and proposed reducing the whole of religion to practical piety and virtue. The efforts of these men were opposed with united zeal and vigilance by the Romish, Reformed, and Lutheran churches; and their designs were so far disconcerted, as to prevent their forming themselves and their followers into a regular and permanent sect. So early as the year 1524, the divinity of Christ was openly denied by Louis Hetzer, one of the wandering and fanatical Anabaptists, who, about three years afterwards, suffered death at Constance [2]. There were not wanting, among the first Anabaptists, several persons who entertained the opinions of Hetzer; though it would be manifestly un-were not wanting, among the first Anabaptists, several persons who entertained the opinions of Hetzer; though it would be manifestly unaccounts we have of the Socinians, and their principal doctors, from Hornbeck (1), Calovius (2), Cloppenburg (3), Sandius (4), Lubieniecius (5), and Lauterbach (6), are far from being proper to satisfy the curiosity of those, who desire something more than a vague and superficial knowledge of this matter. The history of Socinianism, that was published at Paris by Lami in the year 1723, is a wretched compilation from the most common-place writers on that subject; it is also sull of errors, and is loaded with a variety of matters that have no sort of relation to the history of Socinus, or to the doctrine he taught. The very learned and laborious La Croze promised, in his Dissertations Historiques, tom. i. p. 142. a complete History of So-this interesting engagement.

[z] Sandii Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitar.—Jo. Bapt. Ottius, Annal. Anabaptist. p. 50.—Breitingeri Museum Helveticum, tom. v. p. 391. tom. vi. p. 100.479.

cinianism, from its origin to the present times, but did not fulfil

<sup>(1)</sup> In his Socinianism. Consutat. vol. i.—(2) In his Opera Anti-Sociniana.—(3) In his Different. de origine et progressu Socinianismi, tom. ii. op.—(4) In his Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitariorum.——(5) In his Historia Reformationis Polonicse.——(6) In his Ariano-Socinismus, published in German at Francsort in the year 1725.

CBNTa XVI. SECT. III. PART II. is incumbent upon us to substitute a better in its place; and, indeed, the origin and progress of the Socinian doctrine may, I think, easily be traced out by such as are acquainted with the history of the church during this century. There were certain sects and doctors, against whom the zeal, vigilance and severity of Catholics, Lutherans, and Calvinists, were united, and, in opposing whose settlement and progress, these three communions, forgetting their dissensions, joined their most vigorous counsels and endeavours. The objects of denied. For the Socinian doctrine is undoubtedly of much later date than this affembly; it also passed through different hands, and was, during many years, reviewed and corrected by men of learning and genius, and thus underwent various changes and improvements before it was formed into a regular, permanent, and connected fystem. To be convinced of this, it will be sufficient to cast an eye upon the opinions, doctrines, and reasonings of feveral of the members of the famous fociety, so often mentioned; which vary in such a striking manner, as shew manifestly that this society had no fixed views, nor had ever agreed upon any confishent form of doctrine. We learn, moreover, from many circumstances in the life and transactions of Lælius Socious, that this man had not, when he left Italy, formed the plan of a regular system of religion; and it is well known, that, for many years afterwards, his time was spent in doubting, inquiring, and disputing; and that his ideas of religious matters were extremely fluctuating and unfettled. So that it feems probable to me, that the man died in this flate of hefitation and incertainty, before he had reduced his notions to any confilent form. As to Gribaldi and Alciat, who have been already mentioned, it is manifest that they inclined towards the Arian lystem, and did not entertain such low ideas of the person and dignity of Jesus Christ, as those that are adopted among the Sociaiss. From all this it appears abundantly evident, that these Italianreformers, if their famous society ever existed in reality (which I admit as a probable supposition, rather than as a fact sufficiently attested) were dispersed and obliged to seek their safety in a voluntary exile, before they had agreed about any regular fyltem of religious doctrine: so that this account of the origin of Socinianism is rather imaginary than real, though it has been inconsiderately adopted by many writers. Fueslin has alleged several arguments against it in his German work, entitled, Reformations Beytragen, tom. iii. p. 327.

their common aversion were the Anabaptists, and CENT. those who denied the Divinity of Christ, and a Tri- XVI. nity of Persons in the Godhead. To avoid the unhappy consequences of such a formidable opposition, great numbers of both classes retired into Poland, from this persuasion, that in a country whose inhabitants were passionately fond of freedom, religious liberty could not fail to find a refuge. However, on their first arrival, they proceeded with circumspection and prudence, and explained their fentiments with much caution, and a certain mixture of disguise, not knowing surely what might happen, nor how far their opinions would be treated with indulgence. Thus they lived in peace and quiet during several years, mixed with the Lutherans and Calvinists, who had already obtained a solid fettlement in Poland, and who admitted them into their communion, and even into the assemblies where their public deliberations were holden. They were not, however, long fatisfied with this state of constraint. notwithstanding the privileges with which it was attended; but, having infinuated themselves into the friendship of several noble and opulent families, they began to act with greater spirit, and even to declare, in an open manner, their opposition to certain doctrines that were generally received among Christians. Hence arose violent contests between them and the Swiss, or Reformed churches, with which they had been principally connected. These dissensions drew the attention of the government, and occasioned, in the year 1565, a resolution of the diet of Petrikow, ordering the innovators to separate themselves from the churches already mentioned, and to form a distinct congregation or sect [n]. These founders founders of the Socinian church were commonly called Pinczovians, from the town in which the heads of their fect refided. Hitherto, indeed, they had not carried matters so far as they did afterwards; for they professed chiefly the Arian doctrine concerning the divine nature, maintaining that the Son and the Holy Ghost were two distinct natures, begotten by God the Father, and subordinate to him [o].

[n] Lamy's Histoire du Socinianisme, part I. chap. vi. &c. p. 16.—Steinii Epitome Originis Unitariorum in Polonia, apud Sandium, 112

CENT. XVI. SECT. III. PART II.

The progress of Socinepisms IX. The Unitarians, being thus separated from the other religious societies in Poland, had many difficulties to encounter, both of an internal and external kind. From without, they were threatened with a formidable prospect arising from the united efforts of Catholics, Lutherans, and Calvinists, to crush their infant sect. From within, they dreaded the effects of intestine discord, which portended the ruin of their community before it could arrive at any measure of stability or consistence. This latter apprehension was too well grounded; for, as yet, they had agreed upon no regular system of principles, which might serve as a centre and bond of union. Some of them chose to persevere in the doctrine of the Arians, Sandium, p. 183.—Georg. Schomanni Testamentum, apud eundem, p. 194.—Andr. Wissowatius de Separatione Unitar. a Reformatis, ibid. p. 211, 212.—Lubieniecius, Histor. Reformat. Polonica, lib. ii. cap. vi. p. 111. cap. viii. p. 144. lib. iii. cap. i. p. 158.

[0] This will appear abundantly evident to all such as confult, with a proper degree of attention, the writers mentioned in the preceding note. It is unquestionably certain, that all those, who then called themselves Unitarian Brethren, did not entertain the same sentiments concerning the Divine Nature. Some of the most eminent doctors of that sect adopted the notions relating to the person and dignity of Christ, that were in after-times peculiar to the Sociaians; the greatest part of them, however, embraced the Arian system, and affirmed, that our blessed Saviour was created before the formation of the world, by God the Father, to whom he was much inferior, nevertheless, in dignity and persection.

and

and to proceed no farther; and these were called CENT. Farnovians [p]. Others, more adventurous, went much greater lengths, and attributed to Christ PART III. scarcely any other rank or dignity than those of a divine messenger and a true prophet. A third class, distinguished by the denomination of Budneians [q], went still farther; declaring that Jesus Christ was born in an ordinary way, according to the general law of nature, and that, consequently, he was no proper object of divine worship or adoration [r]. There were also among these people several fanatics, who were desirous of introducing into the fociety the discipline of the enthusiastic Anabaptists; such as a community of goods, an equality of rank, and other abfurdities of the same nature [s]. Such were the difagreeable and perilous circumstances in which the Unitarians were placed, during the infancy of their fect, and which, no doubt, rendered their fituation extremely critical and perplexing. But they were happily extricated out of these difficulties by the dexterity and resolution of some of their doctors, whose efforts were crowned with fingular fuccess, on account of the credit and influence they had obtained in Poland. These Unitarian doctors suppressed, in a little time, the factions that threatened the ruin of their community, erected flourishing congregations at Cracow, Lublin, Pinczow, Luck, Smila [t], (a town belong-

[p] For a more particular account of the Farnovians, see sect. xxii. of this chapter.

[q] See the part of this chapter referred to in the preceding note.

[r] Vita Andr. Wissowatii in Sandii Biblioth. Anti-Trin. p. 226.—As also Sandius in Simone Budnæo, p. 54.

[s] Lubieniecii Hist. Reform. Polon. lib. iii. cap. xii. p. 240. [t] Mart. Adelt, Historia Arianismi Smiglensis, Ged. 1741, in 8vo.

CENT. ing to the famous Dudith [u], and in feveral other places, both in Poland and Lithuania, and obtained the privilege of printing their productions, and those of their brethren, without molestation or restraint [w]. All these advantages were crowned by a fignal mark of liberality and munificence which they received from Jo. Sienienius, palatine of Podolia, who gave them a settlement in the city of Racow, which he had himself built, in the > [u] This Dudith, who was certainly one of the most learned and eminent men of the fixteenth century, was born at Buda, in the year 1533; and after having studied in the most famous universities, and visited almost all the countries of Europe, was named to the bishopric of Tinia by the emperor Ferdinand, and made privy counsellor to that prince. He had, by the force of his genius, and the study of the ancient orators, acquired such a masterly and irresistible eloquence, that in all public deliberations he carried every thing before him. In the council to which he was fent in the name of the emperor and of the Hungarian clergy, he spoke with such energy against several abuses of the church of Rome, and particularly against the celibacy of the clergy, that the pope, being informed thereof by his legates, solicited the emperor to recall him. Ferdinand complied; but having heard Dudith's report of what passed in that famous council, he approved his conduct, and rewarded him with the bishopric of Chonat. He afterwards married a maid of honour of the queen of Hungary, and refigsed his bishopric; the emperor, however, still continued to be his friend and protector. The papal excommunication was leveled at his head; but he treated it with contempt. Tired of the sopperies and superstitions of the church of Rome, he retired to Cracow, where he publicly embraced the protestant religion, after having been for a considerable time its secret friend. It is faid that he shewed some inclination towards the Socinian fystem. Some of his friends deny this; others confess it, but maintain, that he afterwards changed his sentiments in that respect. He was well acquainted with several branches of philosophy and the mathematics, with physic, history, theology, and the civil law. He was such an enthusiastical admirer of Cicero, that he copied over three times, with his own hand, all the works of that immortal author. He had something majestic in his figure, and in the air of his countenance. was regular and virtuous, his manners were elegant and easy, and his benevolence warm and extensive.

[w] Sandii Bibliotheca Anti-Trin. p. 201.

CBNT.

year 1569, in the district of Sendomir [x]. This extraordinary favour was peculiarly adapted to better the state of the Unitarians, who were, hitherto, dispersed far and wide in the midst of their enemies. And accordingly they now looked upon their religious establishment as permanent and stable, and presumed so far upon their good fortune, as to declare Racow the centre of their community, where their distant and dispersed members might unite their counsels, and hold their. deliberations.

X. When they saw their affairs in this promi- A summery fing situation, the first thing that employed the atreligion they tention and zeal of their doctors and spiritual rulers, was a translation of the Bible into the Polish language, which was accordingly published in the year 1572. They had, indeed, before this, a Polish version of the sacred writings, which they had composed, jointly with the Helvetic doctors, in the year 1565, while they lived in communion with that church: but, after the breach of that communion, and the order they had received to separate themselves from the Reformed church, this version lost its credit among them, as it did not feem proper to answer their views [y]. After they had finished their new version, they drew up a summary of their religious doctrine, which was published at Cracow, in 1574, under the title of Catechism or Confession of the Unitarians [z]. The system of religion

[x] Sandius, loc. citat. p. 201.—Lubieniecius, loc. cit.

See a German work of Ringeltaube, entitled, Von den Poblnischen Bibeln, p. 90. 113. 142. in which there is a farther account of the Polish interpretations of the Bible composed by Socinian authors.

[z] From this little performance, and indeed from it alone, we may learn with certainty the true state of the Unitarian religion before Faustus Socinus; yet I do not find that 114

CENT. XVI. SECT. IR. PART II.

ligion that is contained in this Catechism, is remarkable for its simplicity, and is neither loaded with that it has been so much as once quoted, or even mentioned by any of the Socinian writers, by any historians who have given an account of their sect, or by any of the divines that have drawn the pen of controversy against their religious system. I am almost inclined to believe, that the Socinians (when in procels of time they had gained ground, acquired more dexterity in the management of their affairs, and drawn up a new, specious, and artful summary of their doctrine) were prudent enough to desire that this primitive catechism should disappear, that it might not furnish their adversaries with an occasion of accusing them of inconstancy in abandoning the tenets of their ancestors, nor excite factions and divisions among themselves, by inducing any of their people to complain that they had deviated from the ancient simplicity of their first founders. These reasons, very probably, engaged the Socinian doctors to buy up all the copies they could find, of this original Confession, or catechism, with a view to bury it in oblivion. It will not, therefore, be improper to give here some account of the form and matter of this first Socinian creed, which contained the doctrine of that, sect before the Racovian Catechism was composed. This account will throw new light upon a period and branch of ecclefiastical history that are highly interesting. The original catechism now under consideration, which is extremely rare, has the following title prefixed to it: " Catechism, or Consession of Faith of the Congregation assembled in Poland, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, who was crucified, and raised from the dead - Deuter. vi. Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one God-John viii. 54. It is my Father-of whom ye say that he is your God. Printed by Alexander Turobinus, born in the year of Christ, the Son of God, 15,4," in 12mo, (1). We find, by a passage at the end of the Preface, that this curious Catechism was printed at Cracow; for it is said to have been published in that city, in the year 1574, from the birth of Christ. Now it is known that the Unitarians had, at that time, a printing-house at Cracow, which was, soon after, removed to Alexander Turobinus, who is said to have been the printer of this little production, is mentioned by Sandius (in his Biblioth, Anti-Trin. p. 51.) under the denomination of Turobinezyck, with scholastic terms nor with subtile discussions; but it breathes, in several places, the SECT. III. spirit PART II.

<sup>(1)</sup> The original title runs thus: "Catechefis et Consessio fidei costus per Poloniam congregati in nomine Jesu Christi, Domine nostri crucisizi et refuscitati, Deut. vi. Audi Israel, Dominus Deus noster Deus unus est, Johannis vii. dicit Jesus: Quem vos dicitis vestrum esse Deum, est pater meus. Typis Alexandri Turobini, anno nati Jesu Christi, filii Dei, 1574," in 12ma.

binczyck, which he undoubtedly derived from Turobin, a town in the Palatinate of Chelm, in Little, or Red Russia, which was the place of his nativity. The author of this Catechism was the famous George Schoman, as has been evidently proved from a piece entitled, Schomanni Testamentum (2), and other circumstances, by Jo. Adam Mollerus, in his Dissert. de Unitariorum Catechefi et Confessione omnium prima (3). The Preface, which is composed in the name of the whole congregation, begins with the following salutation: " To all those who thirst after eternal falvation, the little and afflitted flock in Poland, which is baptized in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, sendeth greeting: praying most earnestly that grace and peace may be shed upon them by the one supreme God and Father, through his only begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who was crucified (4)" After this general falutation, the Prefacers give an account of the reasons that engaged them to compose and publish this confession. The principal motives arose from the reproaches and aspersions that were cast upon the Anabaptists in several places; from which we learn, that, at this time, the denomination of Anabaptists was given to those, who, in after times, were called Socinians. The rest of this Presace is employed in befeeching the reader to be firmly persuaded, that the deligns of the congregation are pious and upright, to read with attention, that he may judge with discernment, and, " abandoning the doctrine of Babylon, and the conduct and conversation of Sodom, to take refuge in the ark of Noah," i. e. among the Unitarian Brethren.

In the beginning of the Catechism itself, the whole doctrine of Christianity is reduced to six points. The first relates to the Nature of God, and his Son Jesus Christ; the second to Justification; the third to Discipline; the fourth to Prayer; the fifth to Baptism; and the sixth to the Lord's Supper. These fix points are explained at length, in the following manner: Each point is defined and unfolded, in general terms, in one question and answer, and is afterwards subdivided into its several branches in various questions and answers, in which its different parts are illustrated and confirmed by texts of Scripture.

(2) This testament is published by Sandius, in his Bibliotheca Anti-Trin. p. 51.

(a) The Differnation of Mollerus is to be found in a collection of pieces, published by Bartholomæus under the following title: "Fortgesezten nutzlichen Anmerckungen von allerhand Materien," part xxi. p. 758.

(4) Omnibus salutem æternam stientibus, gratiam ac pacem ab uno illo altissimo Deo patre, per unigenitum ejus silium, Dominum nostrum, Jesum Christum crucifixum, ex animo precatur cretus exiguus et assietus per Poloniam, in nomine ejustem Christi Nazareni baptizatus.

spirit of Socinianism, even in those parts of it which its authors look upon as most important

From this it appears, at first sight, that the primitive state of So. cinianism was a state of real infancy and weakness; that its doctors were by no means distinguished by the depth or accuracy of their theological knowlege; and that they instructed their flock in a superficial manner, by giving them only some vague notions of certain leading doctrines and precepts of religion. In their definition of the Nature of God, with which this Catechian begins, the authors discover immediately their sentiments concerning Jesus Christ, by declaring that he, together with all other things, is subject to the Supreme Creator of the universe. It may also be observed, as a proof of the ignorance or negligence of these authors, that, in illustrating the nature and perfections of the Deity, they make not the least mention of his infinity, his omniscience, immensity, eternity, omnipotence, presence, spirituality, or of those other perfections of the divine nature that surpass the comprehension of finite minds. Instead of this, they characterize the Supreme Being only by his wisdom, his immortality, his goodness, and unbounded dominion and empire over the creatures. By this it would feem, that, even at this early period of Socinianism, the rulers of that sect had adopted it as a maxim, that nothing incomprehensible or mysterious was to be admitted into their religious system.—Their erroneous notion concerning Jesus Christ is expressed in the following terms: "Our mediator before the throne of God is a man who was formerly promised to our fathers by the prophets, and in these latter days was born of the feed of David, and whom God the Father has made Lord and Christ; that is, the most perfect prophet, the most holy priest, and the most triumphant king, by whom he created the new world (5), by whom he sent peace upon earth, restored all things, and reconciled them to himself; and by whom also he has bestowed eternal life upon his elect, to the end that, after the Supreme God, we should believe in him, adore and invoke him, hear his voice, imitate his example, and find in him rest to our souls (6)." It is here worthy of notice, that

(5) This expression is remarkable; for these doctors maintained, that these declarations of Scripture, which represent the world as formed by Christ, do not relate to the visible world, but to the restoration of mankind to virtue and happiness by the Son of God. They invented this interpretation to prevent their being obliged to acknowlede the divine glory and creative power of Christ.

(6) Est homo, mediator noster apud Deum, patribus olim per prophetas promissus, et ultimis tandem temporibus ex Davidis semine natus, quem Deus pater secit Dominum et Christum, hoc est, persectissimum prophetam, sanciismum sacerdotem, invictissimum regem, per quem mundum creavit, ounis restauravit, secum reconciliavit, pacificavit, et vitam seternam electis sui donavit; ut in illum, post Deum altissimum, credamus, illum adorenus, invocemus, audiamus, pro mod do nostro imitemur, et, in illo, requiem suimabus nostris inveniamus.

ant and fundamental. Nor will this appear fur- CENT. prising to those who consider, that the papers of Lælius that although they call Christ a most boly priest, and justify this title by citations from Scripture, they no where explain the nature of that priesthood, which they attribute to him.—With respect to the Holy Ghost, they plainly deny his being a divine person, and represent him as nothing more than a divine quality, or virtue, as appears from the following passage: "The Holy Ghost is the energy or perfection of God, whose fullness God the Father bestowed upon his only begotten Son, our Lord, that we, becoming his adopted children, might receive of his fullness (7)."—They express their sentiments of Justification in the ensuing terms: "Justification consists in the remission of all our past sins, through the mere grace and mercy of God, in, and by our Lord Jesus Christ, without our merits and works, and in consequence of a lively faith; as also in the certain hope of life eternal, and the true and unfeigned amendment of our lives and conversation, through the assistance of the divine Spirit, to the glory of God the Father, and the edification of our neighbours (8)." As by this inaccurate definition justification comprehends in it amendment and obedience, fo, in the explication of this point, our authors break in upon the following one, which relates to Discipline, and lay down a short fummary of moral doctrine, which is contained in a few precepts, and expressed for the most part in the language of Scripture. There is this peculiarity in their moral injunctions, that they prohibit the taking of oaths and the repelling of injuries. to what regards Ecclefiastical Discipline, they define it thus: " Ecclesiastical discipline consists in calling frequently, to the remembrance of every individual, the duties that are incumbent upon them; in admonishing, first privately, and afterwards, if this be ineffectual, in a public manner, before the whole congregation, such as have sinned openly against God, or offended their neighbour; and, lastly, in excluding from the communion of the church the obstinate and impenitent, that, being thus covered with shame they may be led to repentance, or, if they remain unconverted, may be damned eternally (9)." By their further explication

(7) Spiritus sanctus est virtus Dei, cujus plenitudinem dedit Deus pater filio suo unigenito, Domino nostro, ut ex ejus plenitudine nos adoptivi acciperemus.

(8) Justificatio est ex mera gratia, per Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum, fine operibus et meritis nostris, omnium præteritorum peccatorum nostrorum in viva fide remissio, vitæque æternæ indubitata expectatio, et auxilio spiritus Dei vitæ nostræ non fimulata, sed vera correctio, ad gloriam Dei patris nostri et ædiskationem proximorum nostrorum.

(9) Disciplina ecclesiastica est officii singulorum frequens commemoratio, et peccantium contra Deum vel proximum primum privata, deinde etiam publica, coram toto coetu, commonefactio, denique pertinacium a communione sancturum alienatio, ut pudore suffusi convertantur, aut, si id polint, æternum damnentur.

Lælius Socinus, which he undoubtedly left behind him in Poland, were in the hands of many; and that, by the perusal of them, the Arians, who had formerly the upper hand in the community of the Unitarians, were engaged to change their sentiments concerning the nature and mediation of Christ.

explication of the point relating to eccleliaftical discipline, we see how imperfect and incomplete their notions of that matter were. For they treat, in the first place, concerning the government of the church and its ministers, whom they divide into bishops, deacons, elders, and widows. After this they enumerate, at length, the duties of husbands and wives, old and young, parents and children, mailers and fervants, citizens and magiftrates, poor and rich; and conclude with what relates to the admonition of offenders, and their exclusion from the communion of the church, in case of oblinate impenitence. Their fentiments concerning Prayer, are, generally speaking, found and rational. But in their notion of Baptifm, they differ from other Christian churches in this, that they make it to coeffe in immerfess or dipping, and emerfess or riting again out of the water, and maintain that it ought not to be administered to any but adult persons. "Baptism, say they, is the immersion into water, and the emerfion of one who believes in the golpel, and is truly penitent, performed in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoft, or in the name of Jefus Christ alone; by which solemn act the person baptized publicly acknowlegeth, that he is cleanled from all his firs, through the mercy of God the Father, by the blood of Christ, and the operation of the Holy Spirit, to the end that, being ingrafted into the body of Christ, be may mortify the old Adam, and be transformed into the image of the new and beavenly Adam, in the tirm affurance of eternal life after the refurrection (o)." The last point handled in this performance is the facrament of the Lord's Supper, of which the authors give an explication that will be readily adopted by those who embrace the doctrine of Zuingle on that head. At the end of this curious Catechilin there is a piece entitled, « Economia Christiana, seu Pastoratus Domesticus," which contains a frost inflruction to bends of families, flewing then how they ought to proceed in order to maintain and increase in their houses a spirit of piety; in which also their devotion

10' Baptifians est homines Engagelies cardenties et paraitentium agentie in nomine Patria, et fili et Spiritus Sancia, vel in nemine Jefa Christi, in aquate immerito et emerito, qua publice publicour, se gratia Dei Patria, in finguisse ( hidis, open Spiritus Sancia, ab camaibus precentie abbreum este, ue, se corpus Christi informa, morrifect venerum Admanus, et transforment in Admanus illum cultificm, entres, se pust urfameliinnem confequencem este viture transport.

Christ [a]. It is true, indeed, that the denomina- CENT. tion of Socinian was not as yet known. Those SECT. III. who were afterwards distinguished by this title, past III. passed in Poland, at the time of which we now Ipeak, under the name of Anabaptists, because they admitted to baptism adult persons only, and also rebaptized those that joined them from other Christian churches  $\lceil b \rceil$ .

XI. The

devotion is affifted by forms of prayer, composed for morning,

evening, and other occasions.

The copy of this, Catechism, which is now before me, was given in the year 1680, by Martin Chelmius, one of the most eminent and zealous Socinian doctors, to Mr. Christopher Heiligmier, as appears by a long inscription, written by the donor, at the end of the book. In this inscription Chelmius promises his friend other productions of the same kind, provided he receives the present one kindly, and concludes with these words of St. Paul; God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the strong.

[a] This appears evidently from the following passage in Schoman's Testamentum (published by Sandius, in his Biblioth. Anti-Trin.) p. 194, 195. "Sub id fere tempus (A. 1566.) ex rhapsodiis Lælii Socini quidam fratres didicerunt, Dei filium non esse secundam Trinitatis personam, patri coëssentialem et coæqualem, sed hominum Jesum Christum, ex Spiritu Sancto conceptum, ex Virgine Maria natum, crucifixum, et resuscitatum: a quibus nos commoniti, sacras literas perserutari, persuasi sumus." These words shew plainly, that the Unitarians, or Pinczovians, as they were sometimes called, had, before their separation from the reformed church in the year 1565, believed in a Trinity of some kind or other, and had not gone so far as totally to divest Jesus Christ of his divinity. Schoman, now cited, was a doctor of great authority in this sect; and he tells us that, at the diet of Petricow, in the year 1565, he defended the unity of God the Father against the retormed, who maintained the existence of a threefold Deity. We learn nevertheless from himself, that it was not till the year 1566, that a perusal of the papers of Lælius Socious had engaged him to change his sentiments, and to deny the devine personality of Christ. Hence we may conclude, that, before the year last-mentioned, he and his Pinczovian flock were not Socinians, but Arians only.

[b] This the Unitarians acknowledge, in the Preface to that Catechism, as we have observed above; and it is confirmed CENT.
XVI.
SECT. III.
PART II.
The proceedings of Faustus Socious.

XI. The dexterity and perseverance of Faustus Socinus gave a new face to the Unitarian fect, of which he became the zealous and industrious patron. He was a man of true genius, but of little learning; firm in his purposes, and steady in his measures; much inferior in knowlege to his uncle Lælius, while he surpassed him greatly in courage and resolution. This eminent sectary, after having wandered through several countries of Europe, settled, in the year 1579, among the Unitarians in Poland, and, at his arrival there, suffered many vexations, and much opposition from a confiderable number of persons, who looked upon some of his tenets as highly erro-And, indeed, it is evident, that the religious system of Faustus Socinus, which he is faid to have drawn from the papers of Lælius, was much less remarkable for its than that of the Unitarians. triumphed, He however, at last, over all the difficulties that had been laid in his way, by the power of his eloquence, the spirit and address that reigned in his compositions, the elegance and gentleness of his manner, the favour and protection of the nobility, which he had acquired by his happy talents and accomplishments, and also by some lucky hits of fortune that favoured his enterprises. feizing the occasions when it was prudent to yield, and improving the moments that demanded bold resistance and firm resolution, he stemmed dexteroully and courageously the torrent of opposition, and beheld the Unitarians submitting to his doc-firmed by the writer of the Epistola de Vita Andr. Wissowin, which is subjoined to the Bibliotheca Anti-Trin. of Sandius. This writer tells us, that his sect were distinguished by the denomination of Anabaptists and Arians; but that all other Christian communities and individuals in Poland were promiscuously called Chraesciani, from the word Chraest, which signifies Baptism.

trine, which they had before treated with indignation and contempt. They, in effect, laid aside all feuds and controversies, and formed themselves into one community under his superintendency and direction [c].

CENT. XVL SECT. III. PART II.

XII. Thus did Socinus introduce a consider- The Unitaable change into the ancient Unitarian system, rian religion changed by which, before his time, was ill digested, ill ex- Socious. pressed, and chargeable in many places with ambiguity and incoherence. He disguised its inconfistencies, gave it an air of connection, method, and elegance, and defended it with much more dexterity and art, than had ever been discovered by its former patrons  $\lceil d \rceil$ . And, accordingly, the

[c] See Bayle's Didionary, at the article Socious, tom. iv. p. 2741.—Sandii Biblioth. Anti-Trin. p. 64.—Sam. Przypcopii Vita Socini, which is prefixed to the works of Socious.—Lamy's Histoire du Socinianisme, part I. ch. xxiv. p. 101. part II. ch. xxii. p. 375, &c.

[d] Hence it appears, that the modern Unitarians are very properly called Socinians; for certainly the formation and establishment of that sect were entirely owing to the labours of Lælius and Faustus Socious. The former, indeed, who was naturally timorous and irresolute, died at Zurich, in the year 1562, in the communion of the reformed church, and seemed unwilling to expose himself to danger, or to sacrifice his repose, by founding a new sect, that is, by appearing professedly and openly in this enterprise. Besides, many circumstances concur to render it highly probable, that he did not finish the religious system of which he had sormed the plan, but died, on the contrary, in a state of uncertainty and doubt with respect to several points of no small importance. But, notwithstanding all this, he contributed much to the institution of the sect now under consideration. For he collected the materials that Faustus afterwards digested and employed with fuch dexterity and fuccess. He secretly and imperceptibly excited doubts and scruples in the minds of many, concerning several doctrines generally received among Christians; and, by several arguments against the divinity of Christ, which he left behind him in writing, he so far seduced, even after his death, the Arians in Poland, that they embraced the communion and fentiments of those who looked upon Christ as a mere man, created immediately, like Adam,

the affairs of the Unitarians put on a new face. Under the auspicious protection of such a spirited and infinuating chief, the little flock, that had been hitherto destitute of strength, resolution, and courage, grew apace, and fuddenly arose to a high degree of credit and influence. Its number was augmented by profelytes of all ranks and orders Of these some were distinguished by their nobility, others by their opulence, some by their address, and many by their learning and eloquence. All these contributed, in one way or another, to increase the lustre, and to advance the interests of this rising community, and to support it against the multitude of adversaries, which its remarkable prosperity and success had raised up against it from all quarters; the rich maintained it by their liberality, the powerful by their patronage and protection, and the learned by their writings. But now the system of the Unitarians, being thus changed and new-modeled, required a new confession of faith to make known its principles, and give a clear and full account of its present state. The ancient Catechism, which was no more than a rude and incoherent sketch, was therefore laid aside, and a new form of doctrine was drawn up by Socinus himself. This form was corrected by some, augmented by others, and revised by all the Socinian doctors of any eminence; and, having thus acquired a competent degree of by God himself. What Lælius had thus begun, Fausus carried on with vigour, and sinished with success. It is indeed difficult, and scarcely possible, to determine precisely, what materials he received from his uncle, and what tenets he added himself; that he added several is plain enough. The difficulty arises from this circumstance, that there are sew winings of Lælius extant; and of those that bear his name, some undoubtedly belong to other authors. We learn, however, from Faustus himself, that the doctrine he propagated, with respect to the person of Christ, was (at least, the greatest part of it) broached by Lælius.

accuracy and perfection, was published under the CENT. title of the Catechism of Racow, and is still considered as the Confession of Faith of the whole sect. PART II. An unexpected circumstance crowned all the fortunate events that had happened to this fect, and feemed to leave them nothing farther to defire; and this was the zealous protection of Jacobus a Sienno, to whom Racow belonged. This new patron, separating himself from the reformed church, in the year 1600, embraced the doctrine and communion of the Socinians, and, about two years after, erected in his own city, which he declared their metropolis, a public school, designed as a feminary for their church, to form its ministers and pastors [e].

XIII. From Poland, the doctrine of Socinus The propamade its way into Transylvania, in the year 1563, Socinianism principally by the credit and influence of George in Transyl-Blandrata, a celebrated physician, whom Sigis Hungary. mund, at that time sovereign of the country, had invited to his court, in order to the restoration of his health. Blandrata was a man of uncommon address, had a deep knowlege of men and things, and was particularly acquainted with the manners, transactions, and intrigues of courts. He was accompanied by a Socinian minister, whose name was Francis Davides, who feconded his efforts with fuch zeal, that, by their united folicitations and labours, they engaged the prince, and the greatest part of the nobility, in their cause, infected almost the whole province with their errors, and obtained, for the ministers and members of their communion, the privilege of professing and propagating their doctrines in a public manner. The Bathori, indeed, who were afterwards chosen dukes of Transylvania, were by no means prejudiced in favour of the Socinians; but that sett had become so powerful by its numbers and its influence, that they could not, in prudence, attempt to supprein it [ ]. Such also was the case with the faccessors of the Bathori; they defired ardently to extirpute this fociety, but never could accomplish this defire; so that to this day the Socinians profess their religion publicly in this province, and, indeed, in it alone; and, relying on the protection of the laws, and the faith of certain treaties that have been adjusted with them, have their churches and seminaries of learning, and hold their ecclefiaftical and religious affemblies, though exposed to perpetual dangers and fnares from the vigilance of their advertaries [g]. About the same time the Socinians esdeavoured to form settlements in Hangary [b] Austria [i]; but these attempts were deseated by the united and zealous opposition both of the Roman catholic and reformed churches.

[e] See Wissowatii Narratio de Separatione Unitariorum a Reformatis, p. 214.—Lubieniecius, Histor. Reformationis Polon. lib. iii. c. xii. p. 240.

în Hollani andEngland.

XIV. No sooner had the Socinians obtained a solid and happy settlement at Racow, than the dictaes of zeal and ambition suggested to them views of a still more extensive nature. Encouraged by the protection of men in power, and the suffrages of men of learning and genius, they began to some several plans for the enlargement of their commenty, and meditated nothing less than the propagation of their doctrine through all the states of

Enrate

[f] See Sandii Biblioth. Anti-Trinit. p. 28. & 55.—Pui Debrezeni Historia Ecclesia Resormata in Hungaria, p. 145.—Mart. Schmeizelii de Statu Eccles. Lutherana in Transsituais, p. 55.—Lamy, Hist. du Sociaianisme, part I. ch. xiii. p. 46.—Salig, Histor. Aug. Consessioni, vol. ii. lib. vi. cap. vii. p. 867.

[g] Gustav. Georg. Zeltzeri Historia Crypto Smit

[b] Debrezeni Histor. Eccles. Reform. in Humperia, p. 165.
[i] Henr. Spondani Continuet. Annal. Boronii, ad A. 156.
r 32.1v. p. 764.

Europe. The first step they took towards the execution of this purpose, was the publication of a secr. in. considerable number of books, of which some were designed to illustrate and defend their theological system, and others to explain, or rather to pervert, the facred writings into a conformity with their peculiar tenets. These books, which were composed by the most subtile and artful doctors of the sect, were printed at Racow, and dispersed with the utmost industry and zeal through different countries [k]. They also sent some of their brethren into various parts of Europe, towards the conclusion of this century, as we learnt from authentic records, in order to make profelytes and erect new congregations. These missionaries seemed every way qualified to gain credit to the cause in which they had embarked, as some of them were distinguished by the lustre of their birth, and others by the extent of their learning, and the powers of their eloquence; and yet, notwithstanding these uncommon advantages, they failed, almost every where, in their attempts. A small congregation was founded at Dantzic, which subsisted, for some time, in a clandestine manner, and then gradually dwindled to nothing [1]. The first attempts to promote the cause of Socinianism in Holland, were made by a person whose name was Erasmus Johannis  $\lceil m \rceil$ . After him Christopher Ostorod, and Andrew Voi-

<sup>[4]</sup> A considerable number of these books were republished, in the year 1656, in one great collection, consisting of six volumes in solio, under the title of Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum. In this collection, indeed, many pieces are not inserted, which were composed by the most eminent leaders of the sect; but what is there published, is sufficient to give the attentive reader a clear idea of the doctrine of the Socmiaus, and of the mature of their institution as a religious community.

<sup>[1]</sup> Gustav. Georg. Zeltneri Hist. Crypto-Socinismi Altorsini,

p. 169. [m] Sandius, Bibliotheca Anti-Trinit. p. 87.

CENT. XVI. SECT. 111. PART II. dovius; who were the main pillars of the fect, used their utmost endeavours to gain disciples and followers in that country; nor were their labours wholly unfuccessful, though the zeal of the clergy, and the vigilance of the magistrates, prevented their forming any regular affemblies [n], and thus hindered their party from acquiring any considerable degree of strength and stability [o]. Socinianism did not meet with a better reception in Britain than in Holland. It was introduced into Germany by Adam Neuser, and other emissaries, who infected the Palatinate with its errors, having entered into a league with the Transylvanians, at the critical period when the affairs of the Unitarians, in Poland, carried a dubious and unpromising aspect. But this pernicious league was soon detected, and the schemes of its authors were entirely disconcerted; upon which Neuser went into Turkey, and enlisted among the Janizaries [p].

The main principle of Socimianism.

XV. Although the Socinians profess to believe that our divine knowlege is derived solely from the Holy Scriptures; yet they maintain in reality, that the sense of Scripture is to be investigated and explained by the dictates of right reason, to which, of consequence, they attribute a great influence in Netherlands, tells us, that Ostorod and Voidovius were banished, and that their books were condemned to be publicly burned by the hands of the common hangman. Accordingly the pile was raised, the executioner approached, and the multitude was assembled; but the books did not appear. The magistrates, who were curious to peruse their contents, had quietly divided them among themselves and their friends.

[o] Zeltnerus, Hist. Crypto-Socinismi, &c. p. 31. & 178.

[p] Burch. Struvii Hist. Eccles. Palat. cap. viii. sect. lini. p. 214.—Alting, Hist. Eccles. Palat. in Miegii Monum. Palat. p. 266.—337.— La Croze, Dissertations Historiques, tome i. p. 101. 127. compared with Bern. Raupachius' Presbyterologia Austriaca, p. 113. where there is an account of John Matthæus, who was concerned in these troubles.

determining the nature, and unfolding the various CENT.

doctrines of religion. When their writings are

perused with attention, they will be found to attribute more to reason, in this matter, than most other Christian societies. For they frequently infinuate artfully, and fometimes declare plainly, that the facred penmen were guilty of many errors, from a defect of memory, as well as a want of capacity: that they expressed their sentiments without perspicuity or precision, and rendered the plainest things obscure by their pompous and diffuse Asiatic style; and that it was therefore abfolutely necessary to employ the lamp of human reason to cast a light upon their doctrine, and to explain it in a manner conformable to truth. It is easy to see what they had in view by maintaining propositions of this kind. They aimed at nothing less than the establishment of the following general rule, viz. That the history of the Jews, and also that of Jesus Christ, were indeed to be derived from the books of the Old and New Testamin, and that it was not lawful to entertain the least doubt concerning the truth of this history, or the authenticity of these books in general; but that the particular doctrines which they contain, were, nevertheless, to be understood and explained in fuch a manner as to render them confonant with the dictates of reason. According to this reprefentation of things, it is not the Holy Scripture, which declares clearly and expressly what we are to believe concerning the nature, counsels, and perfections of the Deity; but it is human reason, which shews us the system of religion that we ought to seek in, and deduce from, the divine oracles.

XVI. This fundamental principle of Socinianism The days will appear more dangerous and pernicious, when we consider the sense in which the word Reason this prin-

was understood by this sect. The pompous title of Right Reason was given, by the Socinians, to that measure of intelligence and discernment, or, in other words, to that faculty of comprehending and judging, which we derive from nature. According to this definition, the fundamental rule of Socinianism necessarily supposes, that no doctrine ought to be acknowleded as true in its nature, or divine in its origin, all whose parts are not level to the comprehension of the human understanding; and that, whatever the Holy Scriptures teach concerning the perfections of God, his counsels and decrees, and the way of salvation, must be modified, curtailed, and filed down, in such a manner, by the transforming power of art and argument, as to answer the extent of our limited faculties. Those who adopt this singular rule, must at the same time grant that the number of religions must be nearly equal to that of individuals. For as there is a great variety in the talents and capacities of different persons, so what will appear difficult and abstruse to one, will seem evident and clear to another; and thus the more discerning and penetrating will adopt as divine truth, what the flow and superficial will look upon as unintelligible jargon. This consequence does not at all alarm the Socinians, who fuffer their members to explain, in very different ways, many doctrines of the highest importance, and permit every one to follow his particular fancy in composing his theological system, provided they acknowlege, in general, the truth and authenticity of the history of Christ, and adhere to the precepts which the Gospel lays down for the regulation of our lives and actions.

The fun and fubfunce of Seciniunifin.

XVII. In consequence of this leading maxim, the Socinians either reject without exception, or change and accommodate to their limited capacities, all those doctrines relating to the nature of God and of Jesus Christ, the plan of redemption, and the eternal rewards and punishments unfolded in the Gospel, which they either cannot comprehend, or consider as attended with considerable difficulties. The sum of their theology is as follows: God, who is infinitely more perfect than man, "though of a similar nature in some respects, " exerted an act of that power by which he governs all things; in consequence of which an extraordinary person was born of the Virgin "Mary. That person was Jesus Christ, whom "God first translated to heaven by that portion of " his divine power, which is called the Holy Ghoft; and having there instructed him fully in the knowlege of his will, counsels, and designs, sent "him again into this sublunary world, to pro-" mulgate to mankind a new rule of life, more excellent than that under which they had formerly lived, to propagate divine truth by his ministry, and to confirm it by his death.

CENT.

"Those who obey the voice of this Divine "Teacher (and this obedience is in the power of "every one whose will and inclination lead that "way), shall one day be clothed with new bodies,
"and inhabit eternally those blessed regions, where God himself immediately resides. Such, on the contrary, as are disobedient and rebellious, shall

" undergo most terrible and exquisite torments,

" which shall be succeeded by annihilation, or the

" total extinction of their being."

The whole system of Socinianism, when stripped of the embellishments and commentaries with which it has been loaded and disguised by its doctors, is really reducible to the few propositions now mentioned.

XVIII. The nature and genius of the Socinian The moral theology have an immediate influence upon the doctrine of the Socinian The moral The Moral The Socinian The Moral The CENT. moral system of that sect and naturally lead in AVI. doctors to confine their rules of morality and vienne to the external actions and duties of life. On the one hand, they deny the influence of a divine spicit and power upon the minds of men; and on the other, they acknowlege, that no mortal has fach an empire over himself as to be able to suppress or extinguith his tinful propentities and corrupt defires. Hence they have no conclusion left but one, and that is, to declare all such true and worthy Christians, whole words and external actions are conformable to the precepts of the divine law. It is, at the same time, remarkable, that another branch of their doctrine leads directly to the utmost seventy in what relates to life and manners, fince they maintain, that the great end of Christ's withon upon earth was to exhibit to mortals a new law, diffinguilhed from all others by its unblemithed fanctive and perfection. Hence it is, that a great number of the Socinians have fallen into the fanatical rigour of the ancient Anabaptists, and judge it absolutely unlawful to repel injuries, to take outles, to inflict capital punishments on maleractors, m oppole the despotic proceedings of tyrannical magitrates, or even to acquire wealth by honest indulty. But, in this, there is tomething extremely fingular, and they are here, indeed, inconsistent with themselves. For while, in matters of doctrine, they take the greatest liberty with the expressions of Scripture, and pervert them, in a violent manner, to the desence of their peculiar tenets, they proceed quite otherwise, when they come to prescribe rules of conduct from the precepts of the Gospel; for then they understand these precepts literally, and apply them without he least distinction of times, persons, and circumitances.

XIX. It must carefully be observed, that the Catechism of Racow, which most people look upon as the great standard of Socinianism, and as an accurate summary of the doctrine of that sect, is, in reality, no more than a collection of the popular tenets of the Socinians, and by no means a just representation of the secret opinions and sentiments of their doctors [q]. The writings, therefore, of these learned men must be perused with attention, in order to our knowing the hidden reasons and true principles from which the doctrines of the Catechism are derived. It is observable, besides, that, in this catechism, many Socinian tenets and institutions, which might have contributed to render the fect still more odious, and to expose its internal constitution too much to public view, are entirely omitted; so that it seems to have been less composed for the use of the Socinians themfelves, than to impose upon strangers, and to mis tigate the indignation which the tenets of this community had excited in the minds of many [r]. Hence it never obtained, among the Socinians, the authority of a public confession or rule of faith; and hence the doctors of that sect were authorised to correct and contradict it, or to substitute another form of doctrine in its place. It is also observable, that the most eminent writers and patrons of the Socinians, give no clear or consistent account of

CENT.
XVI.
SECT. III.
PART II
The Catechism of Racow.

[q] We have an account of the authors of this famous Cate-ebism, and of the various success it met with, in the Commentatio de Catechesi Racoviensi, published by Jo. And. Schmidius, in the year 1707. See also Kocheri Biblioth. Theolog. Symbolica.—A new edition of the Catechism itself, with a solid resutation of the doctrine it contains, was published in 8vo. at Francsort and Leipsick, in the year 1739, by the learned George Louis Oeder.

[r] This appears evident enough from their presenting a Latin translation of this catechism to James I. king of Great Britain, and a German one to the university of Wittenberg.

the sentiments of that sect in relation to ecclesiastical discipline and government, and the form of public worship. All that we know is, that they follow in these matters, generally speaking, the customs received in the protestant churches [s].

The flate of learning among the Sociniane.

XX. The first founders and patrons of this sect were eminently distinguished by their learning and genius. Their successors, however, did not follow their steps in this respect, nor retain the reputation they had univerfally obtained. The Unitarians in Poland seem to have had little ambition of science. They gave no encouragement to learning or talents; and appeared little folicitous of having in their community subtile doctors and learned disputants. But, when they perceived on the one hand, that the fuccess of their community required as able defenders, as they had learned and ingenious adversaries, and were so fortunate, on the other, as to obtain the privilege of erecting seminaries of learning at Racow and Lublin, they then changed their sentiments with respect to this matter, and became senfible of the necessity under which they lay, to encourage in their community a zeal for the sciences. This zeal increased greatly from the time that Faustus Socinus undertook the restoration of their declining credit, and put himself at the head of their tottering sect. At that time many persons, distinguished by their birth, education, and talents, embraced

[s] This is manifest from a work composed by Peter Morseovius, or Morseowsky, under the following title: "Politia Ecclesiastica, quam vulgo Agenda vocant, sive forma Regiminis exterioris Ecclesiarum Christianarum in Polonia, qua unum Deum Patrem, per silium ejus Unigenitum in Spiritu Sancto, consitentur." This work, which is divided into three books, was composed in the year 1642, and published in 4to. at Nuremberg, by the learned George Louis Oeder. It is mentioned by Sandius, in his Biblioth. Anti-Trinit. p. 142. who says that it was drawn up for the use of the Belgic churches.

embraced its doctrine, and contributed to promote the love of science among its members. Then the sect. IIL youth were instructed in the rules of eloquence and PART rhetoric, and the important branches of Oriental, Greek, and Latin literature. Even the secret paths of philosophy were opened, though their treasures were disclosed only to a few, who were selected, for that purpose, from the multitude. The Racovian doctors, in compliance with the spirit and taste of the age, chose Aristotle as their guide in philosophy, as appears evidently from the Ethics of Crellius, and other literary records of these times.

XXI. Notwithstanding this progress of philo-Their me-fophy among the Socinians, their doctors seemed the cerding in to reject its aid in theology with obstinacy and dif- theology. dain. They declare, in numberless places of their writings, that both in the interpretation of scripture, and in explaining and demonstrating the truth of religion in general, clearness and simplicity are alone to be confulted, and no regard paid to the subtilties of philosophy and logic. And, indeed, had their doctors and interpreters followed, in practice, this rule that they have laid down with so much ostentation in theory, they would have saved their adversaries, and perhaps themselves, much trouble. But this is by no means the case. For, in the greatest part of their theological productions, their pretended simplicity is frequently accompanied with much fubtilty, and with the most refined intricacies of scientific art. And, what is still more inexcusable, they reason with the greatest dexterity and acuteness concerning those subjects, which (as they surpass the reach of the human understanding) are generally received, among other Christians, as facts confirmed by the most respectable testimony, and consequently as matters of pure faith, while they discover little sagacity, or strength of judgment, ment, in those discussions which are within the sphere of reason, and are properly amenable to its tribunal. They are acute where they ought to be silent, and they reason aukwardly where sagacity and argument are required. These are certainly great inconsistencies; yet they proceed from one and the same principle, even the maxim universally received in this community, that all things which surpass the limits of human comprehension are to be entirely banished from the Christian religion.

The diviform of the Sceinians, and their intelline contrworkes.

XXII. It has been already observed, that the Unitarians had no fooner separated themselves from the Reformed churches in Poland, than they became a prey to intestine divisions, and were split into several factions. The points of doctrine that gave rife to these divisions, related to the dignity of Christ's nature and character, the unlawfulness of infant-baptism, and the personality of the Holy Gbost, to which were added several alterations, concerning the duties of life, and the rules of conduct that were obligatory on Christians. The sects, produced by these divisions, were not all equally obstinate. Some of them entertained pacific dispositions, and seemed inclined towards a reconciliation. But two, particularly, tenaciously maintained their sentiments, and persisted in their separation; these were the Budnaans and the Farnovians. The former were fo called from their leader Simon Budnæus, a man of considerable acuteness and sagacity, who, more dexterous than the rest of his brethren in deducing confequences from their principles, and perceiving plainly the conclusions to which the peculiar principles of Lælius Socinus naturally led, peremptorily denied the propriety of offering any kind of religious worship to Jesus Christ. Nor did Budnæus stop here; in order to give a more specious colour to this capital error, and to maintain it upon confistent grounds, he afferted that Christ was not begotten by an extraordinary act of divine power, but that he was born like other men, in a natural way. This section. hypothesis, however conformable to the fundamental principles of Socinianism, appeared intolerable and impious to the major part even of that community. Hence Budnæus, who had gained over to his doctrine a great number of proselytes in Lithuania and Russian Poland, was deposed from his ministerial functions, in the year 1584, and publicly excommunicated with all his disciples. It is said, however, that he afterwards abandoned his peculiar and offenfive fentiments, and was re-admitted to the communion of that fect [t].

Budazen.

CENT.

XXIII. This heretical doctrine, which had created The sensiso much trouble to Budnæus, was soon after adopted Budnæus by Francis Davides, a native of Hungary, who was embraced by the superintendant of the Socinian churches in Tran- Francken sylvania, and who opposed, with the greatest ardour and obstinacy, the custom of offering up prayers and divine worship to Jesus Christ. Several methods were used to reclaim him from this offensive error. Blandrata employed all the power of his eloquence for this purpose, and, to render his remonstrances still more effectual, sent for Faustus Socinus, who went accordingly into Transylvania, in the year 1573, and feconded his arguments and exhortations with the utmost zeal and perseverance. Davides remained unmoved, and was, in confequence of this obstinate adherence to his error, apprehended by order of Christopher Bathori, prince of Transylvania, and thrown into prison, where he died, in the year 1579, at an advanced age [u]. His unhappy fate did not, however, extinguish the controversy to which his doctrine had given rise. For he left behind him disciples and friends, who strenuously maintained his sentiments, stood firm against the opposition that was made to them, and created much uneafiness to Socinus and. his followers in Lithuania and Poland. The most eminent of these were Jacob Palæologus, of the isle of Chio, who was burned at Rome in 1585; Christian Francken, who had disputed in person with Socinus; and John Somer [w], who was master of the academy of Clausenburg [x]. This little sect is branded by the Socinian writers, with the ignominious appellation of Semi-Judaizers [y].

<sup>[1]</sup> See Sandii Biblioth. Anti-Trinit. p. 54, 55. - Epistola de Vita Wissowatii, p. 226.—Ringeltaube's German Dissertation on the Polish Bibles, p. 144. 152. - Samuel Crellius, the most learned Socinian of our times, is of opinion that Adam Neuser*, who was banished on account of his erroneous sentiments, was the author of this doctrine, which is so derogatory from the dignity of Jesus Christ. See Crellii Thesaur. Epistol. Crozian. tom. i. p. III.

• See sect. ziv. of this chapter.

XXIV. The

[u] Sandius, Biblioth. Anti-Trinit. p. 55, 56.—Faust. Socia. Oper. tom. i. p. 353. 395. tom. ii. p. 713. 771. where there is an account of his conference and dispute with Francis Davides.—Stan. Lubieniecii Histor. Reform. Polonica, lib. iii. c. xi. p. 228.

[w] See Sandius, Biblioth. p. 57. The dispute between Socious and Francken is related at large in the works of the former, tom. ii. p. 767.

[x] Clausenburg, otherwise Coloswar, is a town in Trassylvania, extremely populous and well fortified. The Socinians have here a public school and a printing-house; and their community in this place is very numerous. Till the year 1603, they were in possession of the cathedral, which was then taken from them and given to the Jesuits, whose college and church they had pulled down.

[y] Faustus Socious wrote a particular treatise against the Semi-Judaizers, published in the second volume of his works, p. 804. It is, however, worthy of observation, that the motive which engaged Socious and his friends to employ so much pains and labour in the suppression of this faction, was not a persuasion of the pernicious tendency of its doctrines or peculiar notions. On the contrary, Socious himself expressly acknowledges, that this controversy turns upon matters of very little importance, by declaring it, as his opinion, that praying or offering up divine worship to Christ, is not necessary

XXIV. The Farnovians were treated by the Socinians with much greater indulgence. They were sections. neither excluded from the communion of the sect, nor obliged to renounce their peculiar tenets; they The Farnowere only exhorted to conceal them prudently, and vian feet. not to publish or propagate them in their discourses from the pulpit [z]. This particular branch of the Socinian community was fo named from Stanif-

CENT.

cessary to salvation. Thus, in his answer to Wujeck, (Op. tom. ii. p. 538.) he expresses himself in the following manner: The Christian, whose faith is so great, as to encourage him to offer his addresses babitually and directly to the Supreme Being, and who standeth not in need of the comfort that flows from the invocation of CHRIST, his brother, who was tempted in all things like as he is, is not obliged to call upon the name of Jesus, by prayer or supplication*. According therefore to the opinion of Socious, those who lay aside all regard to CHRIST as an Intercessor, and address themselves direally to God alone, have a greater measure of faith than others. But, if this be so, why did he oppose with such vehemence and animosity the sentiment of Davides, who, in effect, did no more than exhort all Christians to address themselves direaly and immediately to the Father? Here there appears to be a striking inconsistency. We find also Lubieniecius, in his Reformat. Histor. Polonice, lib. iii. cap. xi. p. 228. speaking lightly enough of this controversy, and representing it as a matter of very little moment; for he says, that in Tran-Sylvania there was much ado about nothing +. We may therefore conclude, that Socious and his followers were more artful than ingenuous in their proceedings with respect to Davides. They persecuted him and his followers, lest by tolerating his doctrine, they should increase the odium under which they already lay, and draw upon themselves anew the resentment of other Christian churches, while, in their private judgment, they looked upon this very doctrine, and its professors, as worthy of toleration and indulgence.

[z] Epistola de Vita Wissowatii, p. 226.—Erasmus Johannis (as we are informed by Sandius, Biblioth. Anti-Trinit. p. 87.) was admitted Professor of Divinity in the Socinian academy at Clausenburg, on condition, that in his public discourses he should never say any thing of Christ's having existed before the Virgin Mary.

* Si quis tanta est fide præditus, ut ad Deum ipsum perpetuo recta acceder audeat, nec consolatione, quæ ex Christi sratris sui per omnia tenuati invocatione proficifcitur, indigeat, his non opus habet, ut Christum invocet.

+ Fluctus in simpulo excitatos esse.

CENT. XVI. 82CT. III. PART. III.

laus Farnovius, or Farnefius, who was engaged by Gonesius to prefer the Arian system to that of the Socinians, and consequently afferted, that Christ had been engendered or produced out of nothing, by the Supreme Being, before the creation of this terrestrial globe. It is not so easy to say, what his fentiments were concerning the Holy Ghost; all we know upon that head is, that he warned his disciples against paying the tribute of religious worship to that divine Spirit [a]. Farnovius separated from the other Unitarians, in the year 1568, and was sollowed, in this schism, by several persons eminent on account of the extent of their learning, and the influence of their rank, such as Martin Czechovicius, Neimoiovius, Stanislaus Wisnowius, John Falcon, George Schoman, and others. They did not, however, form themselves into a stable or permanent sect. The lenity and indulgence of the Socinians, together with the dexterity of their disputants, brought many of them back into the bosom of the community they had deferted, and confiderable numbers were dispersed or regained by the prudence and address of Faustus Socinus: so that at length the whole faction, being deprived of its chief, who died in the year 1615, was scattered abroad, and reduced to nothing  $\lceil b \rceil$ .

[a] Sandius, Biblioth. p. 52. & passim.

END OF THE FOURTH VOLUME.

Strahan and Presson, Printers'-Street, London.

[b] We omit here an enumeration of the more famous Socinian writers who flourished in this century, because the greater part of them have already been mentioned in the course of this History. The rest may be easily collected from Sandius.

•
	▲

